Sugar pricing no sweet chore

The Sugar Spiral: Onward Upward

This is the first in a series of articles examining the reasons for rapidly rising prices in a wide range of goods and commodities.

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

The 10 cent chocolate bar is now 20 cents and candy wholesalers say it will go to 25 cents by Christmas.

Last year's $2.50 one-pound box of chocolates now is $3.50 and rising.

The smallest bottle of soft drinks two weeks ago was 20 cents and now is 25 cents, including the 5 cent deposit on the bottle.

In the past year a 14 ounce tin of pears has gone from 29 cents to 40 cents, a 22 ounce bottle of syrup has jumped to 63 cents from 40 cents and bubble gum has doubled to 10 cents a pack from a nickel.

They all have one major ingredient in common — sugar.

One year ago a 5-pound bag of sugar sold for 75 cents. Today it sells for $2.50, an increase of 333 per cent.

The price of sugar has risen rapidly since a five-year world pricing agreement expired Jan. 1, but the increase has been most rapid in the past 30 days — from $36.60 to $44.25 per 100 pounds wholesale.

The escalation has boosted the price of all products using sugar, particularly candies, cookies and processed fruits.

W. S. Deacon, president of Berryland Canning Ltd., said the cost of sugar alone would add one cent a tin to canned peaches and pears in the past 30 days.

He said consumers could expect to pay 40 per cent more than last year for all canned fruits using a thick syrup, a revised estimate from the 35 per cent increase expected at the prevailing price of sugar in August.

Products expected to go up a full 40 per cent are tins of peaches, strawberry jam, pears and cherries. Prunes will go up slightly less because of a lower sugar content in the syrup.

Deacon said some of the increases would be evident now and the rest within two weeks as this summer's harvest moves into store shelves.

The rapid price increases in sugar-based products has resulted in two and sometimes three prices being pasted on grocery items.

A tour of the grocery shelves Friday showed the following prices:

A package of chocolate eclairs was labelled as selling for 75 cents, 79 cents and 91 cents.

A 48-ounce tin of orange juice was labelled at 69 cents and 73 cents.

A 60-cent package of chocolate-covered biscuits was listed at 51 cents and 59 cents.

A 10 ounce tin of apricots was labelled 43 cents and 53 cents.

A 32 ounce package of shortbread was labelled $1.53 and $1.65.

Packages containing six tarts also have two labels showing an overnight increase of between eight and ten cents.

Cheery tarts are labelled 59 cents and 67 cents, blueberry tarts are at 49 cents and 59 cents. Strawberry tarts are 59 cents and 67 cents.

The increases will continue for several weeks as the effects of past increases in the price of sugar work through the retailing system.

There is, however, hope for the future.

A spokesman for B.C. Sugar Co. Ltd. of Vancouver said there is an indication that sugar prices are beginning to ease.

"The period of rapid price increases may be just about over," he said.

There is evidence that the frantic speculations on the world sugar market is cooling off and future price fluctuations may not be as severe as we have been experiencing so far this year."

B.C. Sugar was studying the possibility of lowering its wholesale price a small amount next week.

TWIN FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Mrs. Knievel says she has been upset about her husband's Sunday rocket-jump across the Snake River Canyon, but the hundreds of letters and cables the family has received cheered her up.

"I have to turn out right with so many people praying for him. I just can't feel bad anymore," Mrs. Knievel said in a telephone interview from her Butte, Mont., home.

Mines Minister Leo Nimsick

said Friday he is concerned about the absence of development of new mines in British Columbia and is asking the mining industry for possible solutions.

One method the government would consider, if the mining industry could show that it would help, would be a change in the way Bill 31's escalating royalty is applied to new mines.

According to the formula in the legislation, if the net value of production passes a level 20 per cent higher than a basic price set by the government, the government then collects 50 per cent of any increase.

Nimsick said that due to higher development costs new mining ventures face, the government might consider changing the basic price when the royalty formula is applied to new mines.

The minister said he is in the process of sending letters out to the mining industry asking for suggestions.

The minister said he wasn't even certain that Bill 31, which he said will be proclaimed before the end of this month, is the cause of the drop in new mine production.

"I don't know for sure, but I'm anxious about the fact that there seems to be some dragging of feet in regard to the production of new mines."

Massive Manhunt In Double Murder

A massive city-wide manhunt is underway today following the murder of two middle-aged women employees of a quiet Esquimalt corner store Friday.

Esquimalt Police Chief Art Burton said detectives are still checking leads from neighborhood residents. So far there are no suspects, he added.

Police responded to a phone call around 2:30 p.m. Friday, discovered the bodies of Florence Bevan, 62, of 1324 Lyall and Jane Isabel Plume, 51, of 1153 Munro, on the floor of a small stockroom near the front counter of Ray's Food Market, 1325 Esquimalt.

Early this morning, plainclothes men were thrashing through high grass around the small store searching for the killer weapon, believed to have been a knife.

Last to See Women

Soft drink salesman George Doucette may have been the last person to see the women alive before the killer struck.

"That's what bothers me," Doucette said. "It bothers me because it might not have happened if I had been there longer and it bothers me I might have been killed too."

He said when he arrived at 1:20 p.m. to deliver soft drinks, Mrs. Plume, a mother of four, was alone in the store.

During the 35 minutes he was there, a few people came into the store - all women. As he was leaving, Mrs. Bevan entered. Friday was her day of the day.

Retired newspaperman and self-styled "joe-boy" for the women in the market, Stan Cummer, 1345 Lyall, called the store "one of the friendliest places anyone could possibly find."

There was no sign of a struggle, Burton said. A half-full soft drink bottle rested on the counter. Bloody tracks left at the scene indicated the murderer was alone.

Police feel the killer must have entered just minutes after Doucette drove off.

Residents in the area heard no screams or any indication of a disturbance.

Break for Beer Bottle Speculators

Victorians can still buy low, sell high in beer bottle speculation, thanks to advance warning given Friday by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald.

Beer bottles can be purchased until 11 p.m. today at 25 cents a dozen and resold Monday at 60 cents a dozen. Of course the beer inside would have to be consumer or disposed of before the bottles can be resold.

At the same time, Victoria area liquor stores have ended their beer rationing of two cases per customer so there is no limit to the possible investment in bottle futures until all beer on hand is sold.

Liquor stores Friday night reported a fair supply of beer despite a heavy run on supplies after the announcement of the price increase for bottles.

Most liquor stores in the Victoria area remain open until 11 p.m. tonight. The large Four Bay self serve liquor outlet, however, closes at 6 p.m.

Liquor stores had rationed beer when a shortage developed over the summer following a lengthy work slowdown at two mainland breweries.

Supplies are just about restored and demand for beer is down sharply with the return of cooler weather.

Friday's announcement of a price increase for bottles could create a temporary shortage over the weekend.

The increase to 60 cents from 25 cents was forecast in The Times a month ago. It matches the bottle refund price in Saskatchewan and is higher than Alberta and Manitoba where the current refund rate is 30 cents.

The B.C. government was concerned about a shortage of beer bottles as some were hoarding in anticipation of a price increase and others were believed to be shipping empty beer bottles to Saskatchewan by the truckload.

The government is still studying an application by the breweries for a 20 cent increase in the price of beer. If granted, the price of a case of beer would become $3.55, including 60 cents deposit on the bottles. The price increase might be limited to 15 cents to level the price at $3.50, a government source said.

There was no indication when the government might act on the application from the breweries for a product price increase.

Macdonald also indicated there would be an increase in the price of draft beer, now 25 cents a glass but again there was no indication when a change would come.

Potential applicants for neighborhood pub licences have complained they can not afford all the features sought by the provincial government and still make a profit with and still make a profit with draft beer at 25 cents a glass.

Macdonald said he was reviewing this problem but any increase in the price of draft beer would be small.

Police Seek Clues

anyone wanted the money in the store to give it to them and not make any trouble.

"That's what they would have done ... how could this have happened?"

The women were well-known and well-liked in the neighborhood and as the ambulance removed the bodies, the crowd outside the store appeared shocked and unbelieving.

"They were super-fine people without an enemy in the world," store owner Raymond Squires said.

Chief Burton said he had informed Coroner Edmond St. Jorre of the killings. No inquest date has been set.

Esquimalt police are being aided in their investigation by Victoria, Saanich and RCMP officers.

The murders were the first in Esquimalt since 1958 when Leo Anthony Mantha, 31, was convicted of slaying Aaron Jenkins, a seaman at Naden.

Mantha, who was hanged April 28, 1959, was the last person to be executed in B.C.

Rent Freeze Lifted

The suggestion was rejected by Victoria council.

Clark said the rejection possibly was the result of a misunderstanding about the role of the municipal representative.

He said the person selected would simply be required to investigate the circumstances of the rent appeal and phone a report to the rentalsman office.

He said he could not comment further on the Victoria veto until he had received a formal reply from Victoria council.

Sections of the act dealing with security deposits are not expected to be proclaimed when the other sections become law on Oct. 1.

The rentalsman office is taking a second look at the complications involved in supervising a banking system for deposits.

The NDP government has made it illegal for landlords to collect damage deposits from tenants. However, the new act proposes a system where the tenant would deposit one month's rent with the rentalsman's office. The money could be paid out to the landlord in the event the tenant skipped out or damaged the premises.

The system would give the rentalsman "final say" in whether the landlord's claim for damages is justified.

However, the collecting and paying out of funds for all renters in B.C. involves setting up a type of banking system within the department.

The sections dealing with the security deposit are not expected to be proclaimed until the banking problems are sorted out.

The government is still studying an application by the breweries for a 20 cent increase in the price of beer. If granted, the price of a case of beer would become $3.55, including 60 cents deposit on the bottles. The price increase might be limited to 15 cents to level the price at $3.50, a government source said.

Punishment Fits

Judge, Not Crime

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Some say the punishment should fit the crime. But a U.S. federal study shows it often fits the judge.

The Federal Judicial Center, a research arm of the federal court system, recently asked 50 active and senior federal judges to examine individually 20 case reports, representing 20 categories of crime, and say what sentences they would give.

Through the set of cases given each judge was the same, the sentences varied widely, the centre said in a report made public Friday.

In a bank robbery case the sentences ranged from 18 years in prison and a $5,000 fine to 5 years in prison and no fine.

In an extortion case they ranged from 20 years in prison and $85,000 fine to just three years in prison.

The judges all were members of the U.S. 2nd Circuit, which includes federal courts in Vermont, Connecticut and New York. The 2nd circuit authorized the study.

The cases were real ones, but names and minor circumstances were changed and the actual sentences were withheld.

Scouse Scuppers Spurs Jingle

LONDON (CP) — Phil Boersma scored three goals in the first half to lead Liverpool to a 5-2 win today over Tottenham Hotspur and keep the team at the top of the English Football First Division.

Boersma spent much of last season on the substitutes' bench but walked out on the club when he was not named 12th man for the F.A. cup final.

He followed up the signing of a new contract by scoring two goals at Chelsea last weekend, and today's output made him one of the league's top scorers.

Liverpool's other goals were scored by Emlyn Hughes and Ray Kennedy, while Steve Perryman and Martin Chivers replied for Tottenham.

'A Sad Situation'

Agriculture Minister Whelan shows up as aggressive in defending his department and the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency — but hardly convincing. His explanations do not relieve the public suspicion that there is a great deal wrong with the administration of the Agency, with the egg market, and with the general disposal of Canadian eggs. The explanations may appear logical, but a pragmatic view must produce the same conclusion as that of Chairman Beryl Plumtree of the food prices review board, who describes the disclosure of millions of eggs rotting in Canadian storage "a very sad situation."

In particular, Mr. Whelan made no yards with the Canadian public with his comment that nine million eggs represent only "one third of an egg per Canadian." Nine million eggs look like 90 million to the many people who are short on protein today. Similarly, Mr. Whelan's remark that "egg prices are down six per cent since last January" takes on the appearance of deliberate obfuscation when it is remembered that "last January" egg prices were up 37 per cent over the previous January.

Against that background, the sudden announcement of the agriculture minister that 40 million surplus eggs had been purchased for the World Food Plan sounds less like a charitable undertaking than a panicky unloading. With a reported 12 million eggs gone bad in storage, another 3.5 million declared bad by a processor who bought them from the CEMA, and still further millions expected to be discovered by checks now underway, the whole government purchasing and re-selling system seems to be badly out of joint.

Government plans which start out as attempts to correct over-production, or to safeguard prices and markets for producers, or to guarantee prices for the consumer, almost inevitably become mired down in other problems which beset efforts to monkey with the free market. Russia has experienced the same trouble in trying to make its bureaucratic alternative to private enterprise work in the agricultural as well as the industrial sphere. The United States, with its cotton and wheat controls and payments, its support prices and grants for non-production, has run into similar complications.

So it is no surprise to find that Canada has the same troubles in trying to regulate production among farmers who try to beat the quotas, in deciding to sell to export markets even though prices are zooming at home, in getting stuck with too many eggs and not enough storage facilities. Artificial prices, artificial demand, artificial scarcities — they all lead to other problems that are far from artifical.

It is gratifying to learn that the whole CEMA set-up will be under review — and let us hope that this will be followed by quick remedial action. As Mrs. Plumtree says, there will be barely time to straighten out the chicken egg muddle before turkeys and turkey eggs — also under government agency control — appear on the market.

Education's Yellow Brick Road

Sweeping changes appear to be endemic in the department of education under Eileen Daily. John Brimer was brought in from the United States to give the province new directions in education only to be swept out over a vague disagreement. Endless studies promise an emphasis on smaller schools, new curricula, more provincial control and, at the same time, independence for local boards. Yet after two years of head scratching no coherent philosophy has emerged from Mrs. Daily's ministry.

Now the education minister says she favors smaller schools to serve outlying areas and even the cities — another conclusion from yet another study. In rural areas small schools have merit, especially to avoid having children based long distances. But for better or worse in the last 20 years the emphasis has been on centralized schools. Is Mrs. Daily going to reverse the process on the basis of one study? And what direction will the next education minister favor?

Bigness in itself is not a virtue and logical arguments exist for decentralizing what Mrs. Daily refers to as our "educational factories." But composite schools allow elaborate laboratory, library and audio visual aids which would be extremely costly to install piece-meal in a host of small schools throughout the province. Large schools allow specialists in various subjects to practise their expertise with a sizable number of students in a single day. In small schools a teacher is forced to be a master of the three "Rs," neglecting special areas. And what will be the cost of reversing directions in school construction? The NDP deals ideas as if the financial deck had no bottom.

This imagination would be better applied to processing existing capital expenditure plans for various school boards throughout the province. Some boards are anxious to get started on various projects, only to be sent another set of forms from the department of education. Studies and ideas are a necessary part of a progressive education system, but two years of star-gazing have produced too many layers of red tape.

MAURICE WESTERN

Inside the Egg Controversy

OTTAWA — The open conflict between the ministers of Agriculture and Consumer Affairs may not be entirely unwelcome to the government for a somewhat curious reason. By tackling the formidable Eugene Whelan, Andrew Ouellet has at least managed to identify himself to the Canadian public, which may well be important for a young minister virtually unknown outside his native province.

This is not to suggest that Mr. Ouellet had any such purpose. In view of the current uproar over the operations of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, he probably had little choice in the matter.

The feud in other respects can only be embarrassing. For while the prime minister has on occasion been singularly tolerant of disagreements among cabinet colleagues, this case is particularly dangerous. It is plain from recent history that eggs have a very high emotional content. The number of persons who hold opinions (latterly explosive) on the subject of eggs appears to exceed by a wide margin the number who have developed comparably trenchant views on such subjects as Canada's future role in NATO.

Farmer's Friend

An idea has grown up in Ottawa and seems to have gained wider acceptance in the Trudeau era that there should be a minister for each interest constituency. We have the farmer's friend, Mr. Whelan; the consumer's friend, Mr. Ouellet; industry's friend, labor's friend, fishermen's friend and so on. By virtue of these wise arrangements, each group is assured of a strong voice in cabinet although that of the Minister of Consumer Affairs — are stronger than others.

While this may be all very well, the public has a right to expect policy, not conflict or camouflage, from the government presiding over our affairs. In Washington the Whelan-Ouellet controversy would not seem unusual but the American system, being based on different principles, does not impose the restraints on ministers traditionally recognized here.

There has been, over the years, some erosion of "long-established" conventions but not enough, presumably, to permit a minister the luxury of being in government and, in effect, in opposition at one and the same time.

Mr. Ouellet regrets the nature of recent remarks by his cabinet colleague. It is common enough for ministers to brood ruefully, although privately, on the indiscretions of their co-workers. But it is not at all common for ministers to express their regrets in official and unsolicited news release and it is therefore reasonable to conclude that a comparatively polite form of words is intended to convey (as it has conveyed) the impression that Mr. Ouellet is outraged by Mr. Whelan's attack on Mrs. Plumtree.

It is traditional that ministers accept responsibility for the actions of their subordinates. The Food Prices Review Board has been accorded considerable independence but Mr. Ouellet must answer for it in Parliament as did his unfortunate predecessor, Herb Gray. In the same fashion Mr. Whelan must answer in Parliament for the Egg Marketing Agency, which is perhaps known less for its words than for its actions such as the recent, much-publicized destruction of nine million ill-stored and rotten eggs.

By their recent exchanges, Messrs. Ouellet and Whelan have lifted to the political level what began as a quarrel between Mrs. Plumtree's board and the egg marketing agency. But there is this difficulty: that both are creations of the present government.

Although Mr. Whelan takes particular pride in CEMA he shares with his colleagues, including Mr. Ouellet, responsibility for setting up the Food Prices Review Board and presumably resenting, in company with other ministers, the former criticism that its task was to deflect criticism from the government. In the same way, Mr. Ouellet shares in the collective ministerial responsibility for the board's existence and mandate.

The difficulty is the more acute because the two ministers must also share with their colleagues responsibility for an early decision on the future of the Food Prices Review Board. Will it be permitted to expire at the end of December or will it be given a new mandate; possibly for a term that would enable Mrs. Plumtree or a successor to enlist more adequate staff?

It is obvious that the differences between the two ministers are not minor. Mr. Whelan concedes that some mistakes have been made by an agency breaking new ground. But he is adamant that the basic idea is sound. The board, however, is levelling fundamental criticisms, charging that the concept underlying the marketing board structure has permitted the boards to "mismanage rather than manage the industry" and has led to excessive prices.

In the Whelan view the board and its chairman are guilty of "saying wild things," of picturing CEMA "as some kind of monster or a huge heartless monopoly." Its "instant experts" are kicking CEMA when it is down and also, it appears, urging the government to act which would lead to chaos. If this is the government's view, presumably the Food Prices Board must be put out of business as soon as possible.

Reduce Prices

But in the Ouellet view, the board has done a service by offering constructive criticism as it was intended to do. The marketing system is not working properly; the board's reports should be taken seriously and Mr. Whelan should take steps to bring down the price of table eggs. If this is the government's view, it would seem important to renew the mandate of the Food Prices Review Board.

The differences cannot be glossed over by Mr. Whelan's geniality or Mr. Ouellet's assurance that he will be discussing the egg report with his friend and colleague. Discussions certainly are in order but it is normal practice for these matters to be decided in the privacy of the cabinet. What then emerges is policy. If this is unacceptable to a minister he is free, of course, to join others who have already made it to the back benches.

As already noted Mr. Trudeau has sometimes taken a rather casual view of ministerial waywardness. But it is one thing for Mr. Goyer to dream dreams about mammoth future developments in northern Alberta; visions which few people take very seriously. It is quite another to have an egg war in the federal cabinet, the subject matter being notoriously delicate and of direct interest not only to producers but to every housewife in the country.

No doubt many of us have spent some time on the beach just getting a suntan or a bit of sleep under some shade tree.

But how many of us noticed the sand under our feet. If you didn't, next time you go down to a sandy beach, take a hard look. See how wonderful and beautiful sand can be. There are never two particles the same size, shape, texture or made of the same material.

Where did it all come from? Some came in on the tides, brought down to the sea by rivers from all corners of the world. Some of it was once part of a hill or stony mountain.

Just let some trickle through your fingers and feel the fine edges. It has a silky touch and has all been made by water with the help of winds. At one time it was suspended in water, turned over and over, rubbed against other particles and ground down to fine sand.

We use sand in our daily lives. From it we make the plaster on our wall, the cement in our buildings, and we mix it with soil to help our plants grow. There are many other uses for this rather fascinating article.

Not all sand is made from rocks — there are many places where you may find white beaches composed of the skeletons of some creatures of the sea such as clams, barnacles and corals. This material was made from the sea itself.

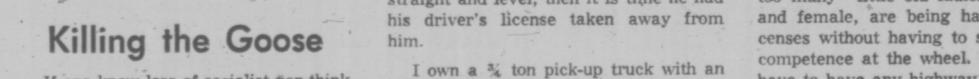

You may perhaps see the difference in patches of color and wonder why. Possibly the heavier minerals have been separated and sorted by the wave action of the sea.

In some places, we find sand dunes formed by the wind, such as along the beach at Island View. Here it has created many ridges and shapes. Note where a clump of grass has grown on the lee side. From that point the sand ridge has been re-formed in a different shape. In other places one can see where a fence has almost been buried. There are many things to be read and seen in an old sand dune.

Have you ever noticed the ripples along a sandy beach? You will never see the same formation again, because these ripples were made by the receding tide and there cannot be two the same. There never has been nor will there ever be the same action. Yes, a beach is a splendid place to spend an hour or two.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Native Needs

Probably many citizens wonder why our native people are holding an Ontario park with threat of armed force and nearer us have been exacting toll from passing motorists. The Canadian Association in Support of the Native Peoples in its latest bulletin gives some of the answers:

"There are more than half a million people of native ancestry in Canada, many of whom urgently need your help. They suffer from poverty, inadequate housing, poor health care, and limited educational opportunities.

"The average life span for Indians is about one-half the national average, and for the Inuit People (Eskimos) it is less than one-third. The death rate of preschool Indian children is three times the national average.

"Just 6 per cent of all Indian children complete high school compared to 88 per cent of non-native children; nearly 50 per cent of Indian families exist on less than $1,000 a year. Nearly 50 per cent of the Indian population (not by choice) is unemployed—ten times the national average; 85 per cent of homes in native communities are without running water, sewers, or septic tanks.

"The native people of Canada today are often impoverished and alienated—the forgotten people of their own land. They are working hard to attain native solutions to native problems. But they need your support. The CASNP offers you an opportunity to do your part. Your help is urgently needed."

The address of the Canadian Association in Support of the Native Peoples is 251 Laurier Avenue West, Ottawa, Ontario K1P 5J6. Individual membership is $10; Senior citizens and students $5; Community groups $15; National Organizations $50. Receipts will be mailed for income tax purposes. — Frances Wilcox, 320 Cook St.

Killing the Goose

If one knew less of socialist non-think, it would be unbelievable that Mr. Nimsick, the Minister of Mines, would attempt to cover up the ghastly mess he has made of mining in B.C. by advertisements (made at taxpayers' expense) of goodies he will provide for prospectors.

(Prospectors can just have a nice holiday at taxpayers' expense).

Existing known ore bodies should be developed into producing mines. No mining company will spend the great sums needed to develop a working mine only to have the government take all the money that belongs to the shareholder who risked his money to develop the mine.

I have a few shares in a B.C. mine and my few dollars, with that of other shareholders, developed a good mine, giving steady jobs to many men. Last year, this mine earned $1.20 per share, but the B.C. government took all but 32 cents of this earning. Now, to survive, this company must develop mines in other countries or provinces, giving jobs

I read Jack Scott's column in Tuesday's Times with increasing infatuation. If Mr. Scott suffers from sweaty palms when travelling along the Vancouver-Hope freeway at 56 mph or more, a freeway that has four wide lanes, is divided and has restricted access, and which runs, at one point, three to four miles, straight and level, then it is time he had his driver's license taken away from him.

I own a 3/4 ton pick-up truck with an 8-foot camper and I have no trouble at all maintaining control at any of the province's posted speeds. In fact I find myself constantly being blocked in my rightful and careful passage by little old grey-haired journalists who got their licenses in 1924 and haven't learnt a thing since.

The reduction in highway deaths that the Americans attribute to their 55 mph speed limit is based on figures compiled during the fuel shortage when states not posting the lower limit showed the same reduction in deaths as the states that did. One further thought on the subject is, though all the states have been forced to post the lower limit not all of them enforce it uniformly and some of them enforce it very little, if at all.

If the province wants to make a substantial reduction in traffic deaths it should enforce the wearing of seat belts and where applicable, the shoulder harnesses. This will save practically all the lives lost on the highway. I have nothing worth doing—is worth doing well . . . even driving.—Paul Whitworth, 1118 Totem Lane.

Evel's Death Wish: The Crisis of Capitalism?

I have heard a story told about a poor harvest worker who died in hospital; when the priest went to anoint his hands in extreme uncouth, the worker refused to open his right hand, in which he was clutching a few grubby coins, unmindful of the fact that neither his hand nor he himself would soon be his at all.

—Miguel de Unamuno, The Tragic Sense of Life.

The top celebrities of stunting are in the news. Charles A. Lindbergh, because he's died. Evel Knievel, because he seems about to die.

Not that there is anything in common between Lindy's trans-Atlantic flight and Evel's planned attempt Sunday to leap 4,781 feet across the Snake River Canyon strapped into a steam-powered rocket.

Lindbergh built upon experience, planned his exploit with the utmost care. If worst came to worst, he could always ditch en route. His feat was one part daring, nine parts skill.

Knievel's will be the other way around. Not The Spirit of St. Louis but "The Spirit of Las Vegas". He will swagger to his ramp and destiny with the edge of his anxiety dulled by a couple of pulls on a bottle of Wild Turkey over-proof bourbon, known within mercifully few seconds whether he'll live or die.

A theory making the rounds is that he knows he'll live — that the Snake River Canyon caper is really no more risky than an elevator ride to the 54th floor of the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

Knievel is portrayed as the most accomplished shill of the carnivals since the Emperor Commodus, who (So Gibbon's history of Rome's decline and fall relates), "received from the common fund of gladiators a stipend so exorbitant that it became a new and ignominious tax upon the Roman people", and whose one-sided bouts, though known to be rigged, were nonetheless performed "before an innumerable multitude of spectators attracted to the amphitheatre by the various motives of flattery, fear and curiosity."

Where Commodus sheltered behind javelin, bow, helmet, sword and buckler — his naked antagonist had only a large net and a trident — Knievel is said to be equally well protected by technology.

By JAMES EAYRS

Computers and ballistic science are to save him from disaster. "I really feel", an envious rival has remarked, "that with the amount of manpower and technology behind him, this shot is going to be a piece of cake".

Never mind that one of two unmanned prototypes fell into the Canyon, the other blew up on the ramp. These, we are to believe, are Knievel's teaser shots, barker's come-ons to boost the gate.

The theory is ingenious, but too clever by three-quarters. It betrays a blind faith in the ability of technology to society through crisis.

Padded, bound and trussed, at the mercy of his thrust — is not Knievel's quest for the pot of gold at the end of gravity's rainbow a replica in microcosm of the predicament of humanity locked up on Sky Cycle Earth?

It is as well as a parable for the absurdities (Karl Marx would prefer "contradictions") being sprung on us by the growing crisis of capitalism.

For consider: in less than ten seconds of operation, and regardless of the condition in which the Sky Cycle's occupant may be recovered — won, lost, drawn, or quartered — it will generate for its promoters more profit than the entire fleet of Pan American Airways has earned by flying hundreds of millions of passenger miles over the last ten years.

Evel says he'll win — maybe. If the heater doesn't blowup and scald me, if the count-down goes right, if the Sky Cycle goes straight up and doesn't flip over backwards, if it reaches 3,000 feet, if the chute works, if I don't hit a wall at 300 m.p.h., and if I can get out when it lands.

"It's" that Kipling didn't count. His "If you can keep your head" he meant only metaphorically.

Not even The Spirit of Las Vegas does justice to this enterprise. Better "The Spirit of Thanatos" so over-developed is the death-wish of the rider. Knievel is a Charon for his own shade, a Phaeton doomed to crash the chariot of the gods.

Ought he to be allowed to?

I find it hard to believe that American jurisprudence, with all its writs and subpoenas and mandamus, could not yet be made to smother the event in the law's delay.

There is a right to kill oneself; suicide's not murder. But should death occur at Snake River Canyon, it will be no simple suicide.

Suicide's a solitary deed, a private act in some lonely room. Knievel will die, if he does die, before the gaze of gawking millions.

Should we shrug it off with a "That's show business"? Here is the ultimate obscenity performed in a public place. A supreme act of prostitution, in which the happy hooker of necrophilia sells not just his body but his life, a rediculoso ad absurdum of private-enterprise.

Let the show go on and what will follow? What can promoters stage for an encore? I forecast a great future for the impresario of professional Russian roulette — one round preliminaries, two round main events. First he should refurbish the Gardens.

The multitudinous seats incandescence, making the green ones red.

If it was packaged it would be called pornography.

Law of the Sea 'Just Matter of Time'

By BARBARA JOHNSON

CARACAS — The Caracas Conference on the Law of the Sea ended with no new treaty on the oceans. It did not even draw up the draft articles for such a treaty. Beyond agreeing on a voting formula at the beginning of the Conference, the only definitive action taken during the entire session was to set the date for the next session. This is to be in Geneva in the coming spring.

What happened at Caracas, and why? The answers lie both in the structure of the Conference itself, and in the informal bargaining "clubs" that countries formed to promote their positions. Each of the 133 countries at Caracas had one vote, regardless of its size, power or population. Passing laws at the Conference required at the very least a two-thirds majority and at best consensus among all 133 countries. Putting together such an overwhelming majority was like trying to form a coalition government in a legislature made up of many small parties and independents. Making things even more complex was the fact that any coalition had to include the two superpowers, or any laws it made would be politically meaningless.

In the six years since the United Nations Seabed Committee was set up, the politics of the oceans have produced a number of bargaining groups. First, and most basic, is the club of developing states, the "Group of 77." In fact, the group numbers 102 or 103 countries, and includes all the states of the developing world.

China watched

Even the Chinese, traditionally aloof, had observer status here. The group shares a commitment to rewrite the rules of the oceans. The First and Second Conferences on the Law of the Sea, held in 1958 and 1960, took place when most of these countries were still colonies.

They object to the laws these conferences made on two grounds — one that they had no voice in making those laws, and the other that the rules actually discriminated against developing countries. To them, the old order, relying as it does on a narrow territorial sea, freedom of the high seas and enforcement by the flag state (the country whose flag a ship sails under) worked in favor of the naval powers, and the great merchant and fishing fleets of the world.

Ranged against the developing group, in an extremely shaky alliance, are most of the world's 40 developed states. Dominant members of the group are the West European states, Japan, the Soviet bloc and the United States, with the latter in a curiously isolated position. Sitting between the developed and developing groups are the mavericks — originally just Canada, and now Norway, Australia and New Zealand as well.

These are the basic political alignments that characterize ocean politics. But in addition to these, there is a host of other cross-groupings and regional sub-groups which have formed around specific ocean problems. Because of this, instead of two opinions on each issue, there were many more, making negotiation incredibly difficult in all three of the committees at Caracas.

In Committee I, which was supposed to set up an international agency to exploit the manganese nodules found in the international seabed area, the alignment was closest to that of the developed versus the developing countries.

Even so, the developed countries all put in different proposals for the seabed regime, and although the developing countries all want a strong agency that will run rather than be run by deepsea mining companies, they were badly divided over the details.

Uncertainty as to the economic effects of seabed production of nickel, copper and cobalt introduced further tension into the debate. The developing countries (and Canada) that are land producers of these metals were afraid they would be harmed by seabed production, and wanted economic controls over seabed mining.

At times they were joined by the "geographically disadvantaged" states. This includes a cohesive group of two dozen "shelf-locked" states, plus about 50 others who because they face out onto enclosed or semi-enclosed seas like the Mediterranean and Baltic do not get a full 200-mile economic zone.

At the other extreme, the small group of countries whose continental shelves go out beyond 200 miles continued to press for control over the continental shelf to the edge of the margin. The group includes Canada, Brazil, Argentina, India and the United Kingdom. They interest in mil-ed the support of the Latin American bloc, but made slow headway elsewhere.

Likewise, the handful of countries wanting control over salmon beyond 200 miles made no definite gains. While a number of European countries have salmon rivers or hatcheries, they are tending towards regional arrangements which would continue the high seas salmon fishery.

The problem of islands set up another set of coalitions in Committee II. The oceans are dotted with innumerable rocks, islets and atolls. Is each to have its own 200-mile economic zone? Continental states such as Malta worked together to ensure they got as much as anyone else.

The archipelagic states — countries like Fiji or the Philippines made up of groups of islands — worked equally well together to insist that the baselines from which the territorial sea and the new economic zone would be drawn were straight lines connecting the outermost parts of the archipelago.

Similarly, the "straits states" — countries such as Singapore that border key international waterways like the Straits of Malacca — sought to extend their control over these waterways.

These three groups — island states, archipelagic states and straits states — all are in direct confrontations with the major maritime states. The United States, the Soviet Union, Japan, France and the United Kingdom have all made it very clear that their acceptance of the 12-mile territorial sea and 200-mile economic zone rested on free or transit passage (rather than the more restrictive innocent passage) through international straits.

Committee III, looking at problems of marine pollution and control over scientific research in the projected economic zone and the high seas, emerged with a different set of coalitions. The two superpowers held together to promote as little interference with oceanographic research as possible in any part of the oceans. Their interest in miltary research is a major factor, but they are joined by the West European states and Japan, who have an interest in the commercial aspects of everyday scientific research.

The control of marine pollution produced another set of alliances. The issue of regulation standards proved intractable. Canada was perhaps at the most extreme edge of the group seeking full coastal state jurisdiction, with the developing states slightly more in the middle and countries active in international shipping seeking a combination of flag state and coastal state control.

The Caracas Conference was, then, characterized by the emergence of some very special interest among groups of states, and a general lack of willingness to bargain and negotiate on an overall agreement. Nobody, in short, gave up anything at Caracas.

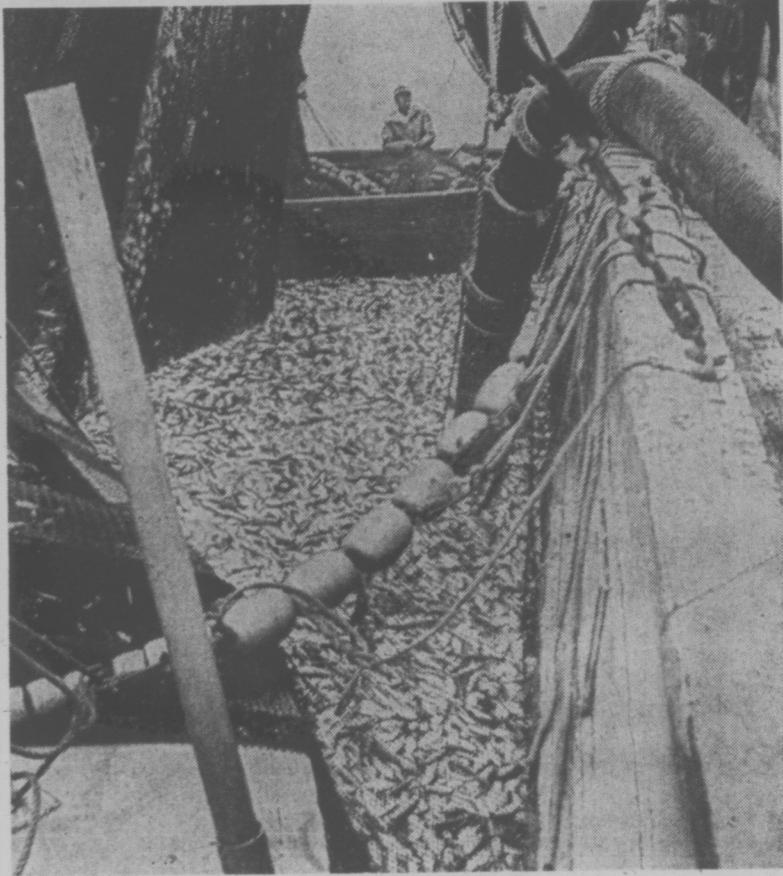

There are now three future possibilities. The first is that this bargaining will take place in Geneva next spring and a general Convention successfully emerge.

The second is that a number of developing states might join the Latin American bloc in declaring unilaterally a full 200-mile territorial sea.

Bilateral deals

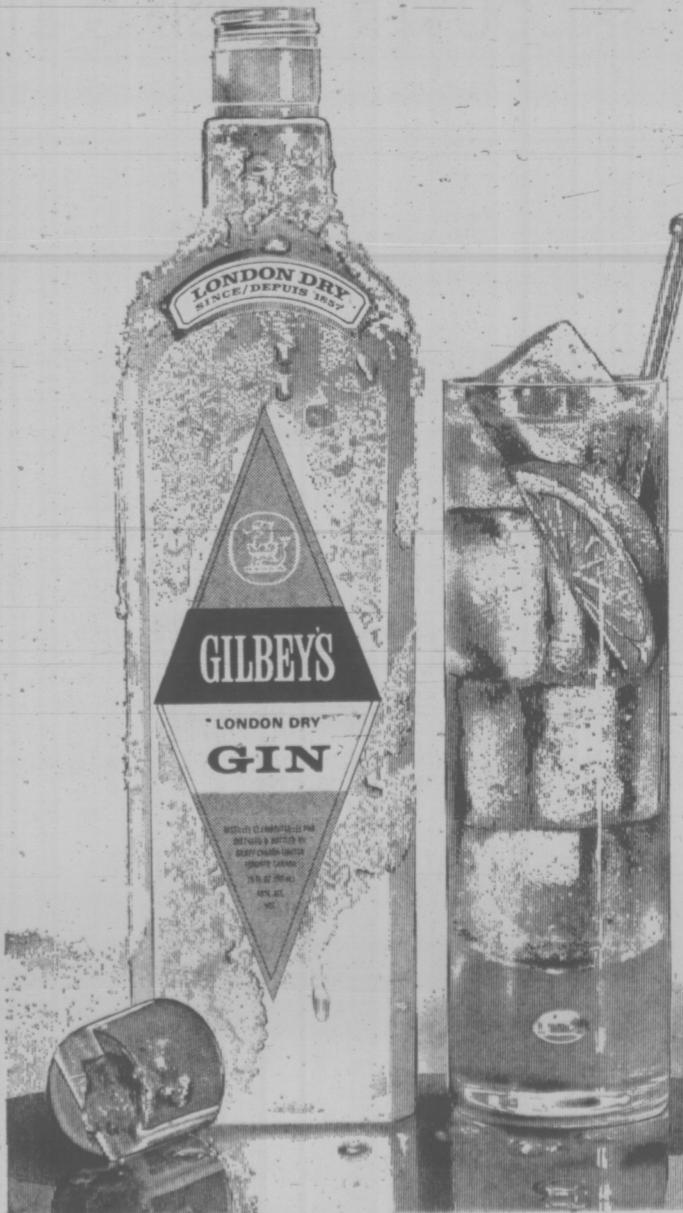

The final possibility is that the United States Hard Minerals Act and 200-mile fishing zone will pass in Congress and become law in the next few months, thus destroying the basis for a multilateral agreement. This is a distinct possibility, particularly if the American defense community feels it can get satisfactory bilateral deals with key states such as Indonesia.

However, the chance that Geneva will achieve what Caracas didn't, seems the most likely outcome. Most delegates at Caracas appeared to feel it was just a matter of time until agreement was reached. Whether or not they were correct should become apparent over the next six months.

The Gut Issue and Other Gambits

By WILLIAM SAFIRE

People who found themselves left out of conversations when friends expounded upon the intricacies of skiing or professional football now have three new worlds of expertise in which to feel inferior: tennis, darts and backgammon.

These are the "new sports" which dominate the conversational scene.

Learning to play these sports is a waste of time; faddish gamblers and athletes will soon be on to something else and the belated learner will feel the way he did when he was just getting the hang of the rumba when the conga and the mambo swept in.

The best way to participate in these new sports is to skip the exertion and learn the lingo, a form of Stephen Potter gamesmanship known to "picketing pro footballers as the "play-fake."

In tennis conversation, the tennis faker's verbal serve must be overpowering: a weakly earnest "How's your job life?" is considered a mouth fault. Tennis players rarely talk about the game itself, rather about the difficulty in finding an available court; accordingly, the aggressive tennis faker will urge his associates to meet him at the public courts in Van Cortlandt Park where they open at six in the morning.

Tennis (from the French "tennis" or "take that!") is more of a racket than a game. They get you by the smart white pants or chic tennis dresses, the expensive sneakers and modish headbands. Join in the complaints about the game with gusto, concluding with an interminable story about finding a great place to play only 200 miles from your office.

No person is left out of the current chatter of the new sports if he takes a firm position on the controversy raging through the tennis world: Does one get more swat for the swing with a sheep-gut string lacing a wooden racket or with a nylon twist laced onto an aluminum frame? In tennis politics, this is known as "the gut issue."

The words "Tennis, anyone?" — spoken by young Humphrey Bogart in an early stage role — still frame a rich man's question. There is little sandlot tennis. But another sport, traditionally more democratic, is taking its place in the forefront of sportbanter.

Darts! The very name sends shivers up the thumb. Darts is the game serfs could play while their feudal masters were cavoring on the tennis courts, and which became inextricably linked with the English pub. Fittingly, the dartboard has replaced the television set in salons across America.

A pointer about darts: It is not necessary to participate physically, or even to frequent the local tavern, to enjoy the sparkle of darting eyes. There is amusement enough for the darts faker in debating the science of the game, as in "Brass darts don't squeeze together on the target as well as tungsten darts do."

Backgammon, which used to be relegated to the flip side of checkerboards, is a game in which players throw dice and stack up their checkers on skinny pyramids until one or the other gets all his pieces off the board, at which point he wins — or loses, it's hard to remember which — but I will not soon forget that when four people play, it is called parchesi.

A daring backgammon faker can insinuate himself into conversation on the beach with "That was some game we got up to 64 and I gammoned him," as the verb "to gammon" is akin to the gin rummy verb "to schneide" and a reference to the pulverization of an opponent in any game brings remembered pleasure all around.

An other conversational gambit is an opening move in chess sacrificing a pawn, but chess is to backgammon what golf is to tennis. Last year's topic of conversation is to dispute the etymology of the name of the game. The Anglo-Saxon derivation would be "back game" — i.e., a game in which pieces are sent back — while its Welsh root is bac'h (little) cammawn (battle).

A backgammon faker can play the odds, from a kibitzing position: "It's nine to four against being hit on one, you know," but 11 to one against being hit on 12." A small table carried on the back of a counterfeiter parking ticket can take one through an entire summer weekend.

What profound sociopolitical significance can be found in the emergence of the "new sports"? Perhaps Americans, as a people, have found in tennis the exercise of powerlessness; or, in darts, a squint-eyed lust for zeroing in on targets; or, in reaching backgammon, have found a yearning for normalcy as reflected in the simpler pastimes of the past.

Or maybe the nation, in yakking merrily away in the quasi-conversation of the new sports, is expressing its delight not having to talk about Watergate or war for the first time in a dozen years.

MR. FARRELL received his early training in England where he graduated in Engineering at London University, and in Naval Architecture at The Royal Naval College, Greenwich, England. Called in 1949 to be responsible for the design of the St. Laurent Class of Naval Destroyer, the first destroyers to be designed in Canada. He subsequently served in the Canadian Armed Forces in the rank of Captain (NAVY) in senior design and management appointments and finally as Director, Technical Services, Quebec Region.

He is active in professional societies as a Member of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, is a Fellow of the Royal Institute of Naval Architects and is on the Council of the Navy League of Canada.

INCO PURCHASE NOW COMPLETE

TORONTO (CP) — International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. announced Thursday that 99 per cent of the common stock of ESB Inc. of Philadelphia has been tendered, completing Inco's takeover of the largest battery maker in the United States.

Offering $41 a share, Inco's tender offer expired at 10 a.m. EDT Wednesday, with more than 5,535,000 shares tendered.

With Inco first announced its takeover intentions in late July, the company became involved in an 11-day bidding war against United Aircraft Corp. of Hartford, Conn.

Bank Revives Personal Touch

VANCOUVER (CP) — Ever hear of a bank that would prepare travellers' cheques and then deliver them to you personally?

How about one that would install a brass foot rail and a moose head as part of the decor of one of its downtown branches?

Or a bank that operates 16 floors above street level?

Unity Bank, the 10th, newest and smallest chartered bank in Canada, does that in its three B.C. branches, all in Vancouver.

"We're a small bank and we intend to stay small," says Dick Gasten, Unity's 36-year-old B.C. area manager.

Although his operations now are confined to Vancouver, Unity plans to open two or three branches a year throughout the province during the next few years. It has 13 branches in four provinces now.

"We want to do more for our customers, particularly in the area of personalized service, than the other banks do," Gasten says.

One of the things it has done is open an "executive branch" on the 16th floor of an office tower.

A street-level corner location would not only have cost at least twice as much but would also have been more risky," says Gasten. "You never know when a new development might leave you with a closed sidewalk or front or change traffic patterns for example."

The executive branch doesn't look like a bank. The teller isn't in a cage or behind a counter. Instead she sits across a table from the customer who can plow down in an upholstered chair. So customers waiting to be served.

"There are a lot of professional people in this building and others nearby," says Gasten.

"They don't want to have to waste time by standing in line."

"Why, if a customer in this building needed some travellers' cheques in a hurry, we'd even prepare them and deliver them to his office for delivery in a signature."

Another branch is in an Italian district. The manager is of Italian extraction. Again there are no counters. Tellers are behind stands which are a normal height for the average North American.

A Sad and Sorry Tale But Very True

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

Here's a tax tale that, though sad for the taxpayer involved, may help others in similar circumstances in avoiding a trap.

It has particular relevance to those whose tax status isn't always clear as to whether they are employees, self-employed, agents or independent contractors.

Commissioned salesmen of cars, securities and a variety of other products frequently fall into this uncertain category. Those taxpayers often encounter difficulties in claiming deductions for expenses, such as travel, automobile, and entertainment costs because if they are classed as employees these expenses aren't usually deductible, but if they are self-employed then these outlays will normally be regarded as ordinary deductible costs of doing business.

The most recent case to come before the tax courts involved a securities salesman.

She had been a customers' man for over fifteen years, working in Montreal for a Toronto-based securities dealer. She was a registered securities dealer and in fact had been interested in a securities dealer company operated by her husband in Montreal.

She stipulated that if they ever received payment from the company, they would refund same to her. Indeed, an unusually generous offer.

Unfortunately, when the bankruptcy proceedings were complete and the company liquidated, there was nothing left for the creditors since she voluntarily made good to her customers in the amount of $49,000.

At the end of the 1969 year, concluding that this money was gone forever, she claimed a tax deduction against her other income on account of the $49,000 loss.

The revenue objected on the ground that she was not self-employed and was not carrying on a business.

Rather, they contended, she was at all times an employee of the Toronto securities firm, and was under no legal obligation to pay out the $49,000.

The fact that she did pay out the funds was construed as either a gratuitous act of generosity (i.e. a non-deductible gift) or a non-deductible outlay to protect a capital asset, namely her reputation.

Whether or not she had acted on tax counsel's advice isn't known, but the distressed lady now engaged a lawyer and protested her tax assessment.

The case was heard by the tax review board.

There, the assistant chairman, Lucien Cardin, Q.C., carefully reviewed her working relationship and terms of engagement with the company and reached the conclusion that the relationship of employer-employee existed.

Notwithstanding that she was paid on a commission basis, he ruled that her conduct was subject to the control of the company.

Having rejected the argument that she was an independent contractor he applied the appropriate legal principle, namely, that an employee cannot claim deductions from employment income for any expenses unless they are specifically provided in the income tax act, or unless they are laid out as a requirement of holding the job.

Since the $49,000 didn't fall into any of these categories, Mr. Cardin concluded that it must be characterized as a capital payment made to protect a capital asset, the taxpayer's reputation. Under the old income tax act, under which this case was decided, capital payments of this kind are neither deductible nor depreciable for tax calculation purposes.

It is probable that the new Income Tax Act, which applies to events after January, 1972, would have treated her more kindly, but not sufficiently to ignore the problem.

It is because of the anomaly of tax law which gives greater tax flexibility to the self-employed than to the employed taxpayer that those who fall into the latter region between the two categories are clarifying their positions by incorporating themselves and legally establishing a more favorable tax status.

The growing number of incorporated business executives, television entertainers, car salesmen, and life insurance underwriters is clear evidence of the trend and its necessity.

It is quite certain that employers will encounter an increasing number of requests from key sales and executive staff for a change in the relationship such as will allow the people involved to establish themselves as independent businessmen within the organization.

African Legends Have Parallels With Our Bible

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (CP) — The Bashankwe people have their own version of how the world came into being and it contains a number of startling parallels with the biblical Genesis.

According to the Bashankwe, in the beginning God created the earth and the waters on the earth. Then, when He saw how bare it was, He created the trees, flowers, plants and grass.

He rested for a while but still found the world empty, so He made birds, beasts, reptiles and fishes out of clay and breathed life into them.

Finally He decided to make creatures in His own image so He created a woman. He then created a man, also out of clay and gave them life.

As all living things had been made in pairs they multiplied and God felt His work was done and He made nothing more.

Finally He decided to make making of the sun, the moon and the stars. The Bassankwe people's legend accounts for this.

A legendary hare, Tsoro, came across a ladder leading to the sky. He climbed this ladder and found a group of young women who were in charge of the heavenly bodies.

Tsoro took out his mbira—a small stringed instrument often called the African piano—and played so beautifully the women wanted to play it as well.

While they did so, Tsoro left, taking the sun, moon and stars with him. As he returned down the ladder, to earth he scattered them in the sky.

But the Bashankwe's African Genesis goes further.

They say God found that some men worked hard and plowed the fields while others refused to work, saying they could get by on roots and berries.

AD REPORT SOON

The consumer services report on advertising standards in B.C. is expected to be ready for publication in late October. Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young said Friday.

Ian McLeod, a specialist in retail advertising in the province, is still meeting with media representatives to ascertain what standards they apply before accepting advertisements.

The media are exempted from the trade practices act if they accept advertisements in good faith. McLeod is attempting to pin-point the media's perception of good faith.

Young said work is also progressing favourably in investigations into prepaid consumer contracts and misleading contract forms.

"Insolvent firms, the front-end loading of contracts and other questionably practices are some of the areas to be investigated," she said.

"Too many contract forms and invoices used by suppliers, merchants and credit grantors, contain terms that do not accurately disclose the consumer's legal rights."

Poor Grain Harvest PromisesHigh Prices, More Shortages

OTTAWA (CP) — Statistics

Canada has predicted a sharp cut in the 1974 grain harvest, raising prospects of further shortages and higher prices for a vast range of foodstuffs.

The statistics bureau reported Friday, on the basis of estimates made before a killer frost hit Saskatchewan grain fields, that crop production this year will be substantially lower than last year's and below the average yield during the last decade.

The forecast follows similar gloomy predictions about this year's corn crop in the United States and represents yet another serious setback in an increasingly food-short world.

For farmers, the drop in wheat and feed grain production means, they will be unable to cash in on high prices and strong demand for their crops, though they can probably expect even higher prices for the grain they do produce.

For consumers, the cut probably will mean higher prices for many food products. While the government subsidizes the cost of wheat used domestically for bread, higher barley and oat prices are passed on through increased meat, poultry and egg costs.

The statistics bureau said the 1974 wheat harvest is expected to be about 542.6 million bushels, down from 604.7 million grown last year, and 611 million bushels produced on average since 1963.

Birds production is expected to dip to 431.1 million bushels from 468.6 million last year, and the oat harvest may be down to 293.7 million bushels from 326.9 million in 1973.

The report, however, is based on estimates compiled Aug. 15, more than two weeks before a heavy frost struck grain fields in Saskatchewan and rye production.

As a result, there has been a slight increase in rapeseed munications bureau in the federal department of communications.

IDAHO'S SNAKE RIVER CANYON SEPT. 8, 1974

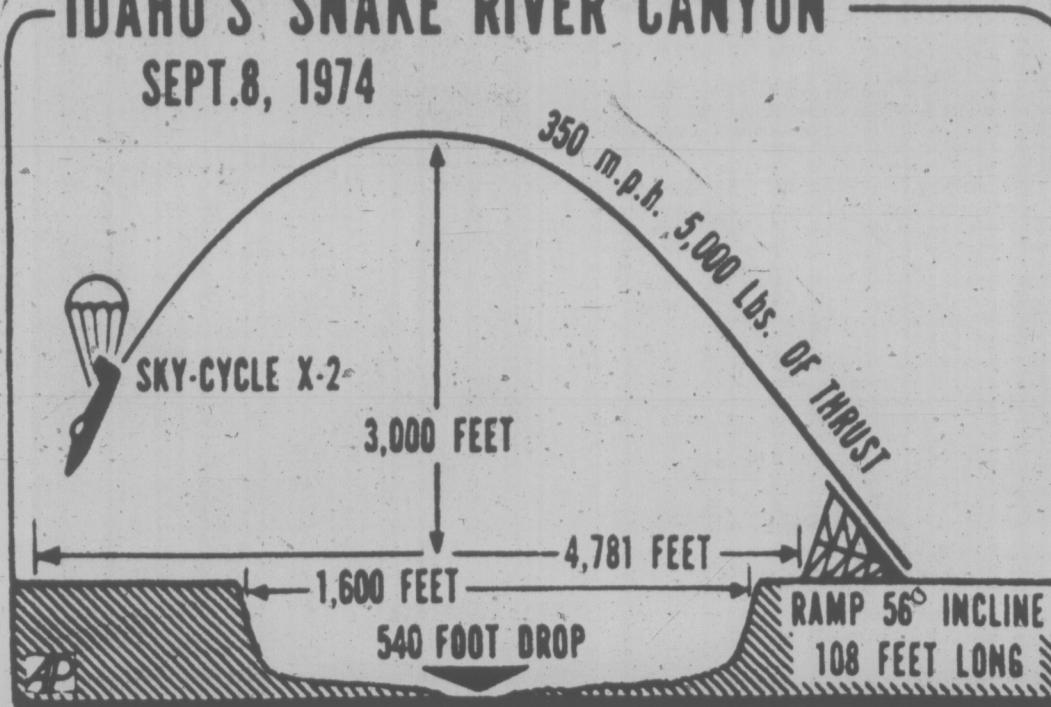

Diagram shows distances, speeds for success

'It Looks Pretty Silly...'

TWIN FALLS, Idaho (AP) — "It all looks pretty silly to me," said Jerry Hunt, 90, a retired barber.

"But it's all right with me, he can do what he wants and I wish him good luck."

Most of the residents of this peaceful town can't understand why Evel Knievel would want to jump over the Snake River Canyon in his Sky Cycle, but they wish him well with his attempt Sunday.

Promoters said they expected 50,000 people to attend the event.

* * *

So far, they estimate that less than half have arrived. Hotels in the area report that their rooms are sold out and some are already taking advantage of the influx of city slickers to double their room rates.

Interviews with more than a dozen local residents reveal mixed emotions about the jump. Some think it is just a big publicity stunt, some say it's good for business and tourism in Twin Falls, and others say they're more excited about the county fair that is going on this week.

Mayor Winston Jones, who said he will be at the site Sunday, said he is sure Knievel's jump will be successful.

"With all that engineering know-how he has working for him, I assume he knows what he's doing," the mayor said.

* * *

Like several others, Jerry Swensen thinks the whole business is a publicity stunt. Several weeks ago Swensen, who owns a meat market, ran an ad saying Evel Knievel was full of baloney.

"Knievel's been saying he's going to jump the canyon for years, and he's always backing out. He also gave the impression he would do it on a motorcycle, and what's the big deal in going across the canyon in a jet-propelled rocket? It's all a put-on," he said.

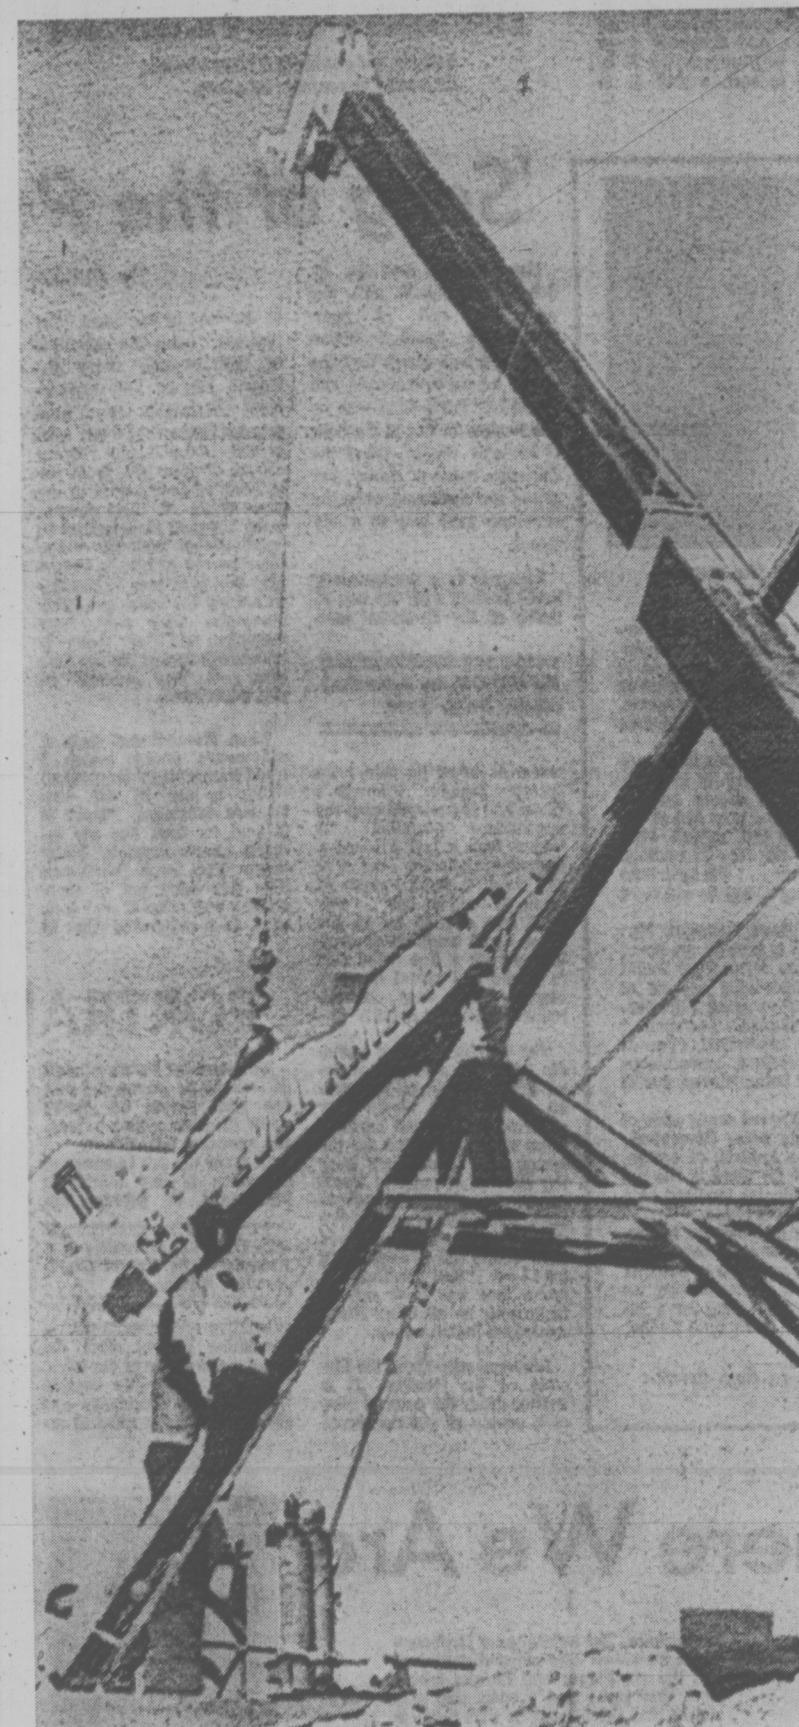

OWNER OF THE LAND from which Knievel will make his jump Sunday, Tim Quells, talks with one of the topless girls who have arrived to witness the event.

Beer, Wine and Sun For Openers

TWIN FALLS, Idaho (UPI) — Several thousand motorcyclists and other early arrivals created an instant city today around the launch site for Evel Knievel's rocket ride over the Snake River Gorge.

They camped in tents, vans, cars, trailers, campers, under tarps or out in the open in tree-studded farmland several hundred feet from the south rim of the quarter-mile-wide canyon.

During the day, they sunbathed in 80 degree heat, consumed thousands of cans of beer and bottles of wine, watched motorcyclists compete in the preliminaries to a $125,000 race being held in conjunction with Sunday's "jump," and stood around talking about their trips to Southern Idaho.

Bone-weary bikers, some of them on the road nearly a week to reach the launching area about two miles northeast of this farming town of 22,000, just sat and rested.

Leonard Rossin, who left Rochester, Minn., last Saturday, finished his 1,600-mile ride Thursday. He arrived just before James Yokley, who started west from Kansas City on Sunday.

The promoters of Knievel's jump collected a $25 admission fee as the fans turned into the launching area. They expect 50,000 people.

"Our most serious problem so far has been skinny-dipping at Shoshone Falls," said Twin Falls county sheriff Paul Corder, adding that swimmers had donned clothing when asked by officers.

Corder said he instructed his deputies to "use discretion and a low-key approach" in dealing with the crowds drawn by the jump and by the county fair being held this weekend in Twin Falls.

Bob Arum, president of Top Rank, Inc., the promotion firm which has guaranteed

Knievel $6 million for the stunt, said that ticket sales were booming, both at the scene and at 275 theatres in the United States and Canada where the ride will be shown on closed circuit television.

"Exhibitors report sales are going gangbusters — doubling and tripling what they had in at the start of the week," he said. "The exhibitors expect to go capacity or near capacity."

Knievel, 34, was at his Butte, Mont., home.

The promoters — caught between critics who say the stunt is suicidal and those who complain it's about as dangerous as a carnival act — insisted the rocket ride is safely engineered but still risky enough to be worth seeing.

"He is going to make it with lots of room to spare," Arum said, quickly adding: "But it will be risky. I wouldn't want to be in his shoes."

Robert Truax, a former aerospace engineer who designed the steam-powered rocket that Knievel will drive off a steep, 108-foot ramp and parachute to the other side of the river, said he had "no fears about success" but would have liked more tests.

"There are no weaknesses that I know of," Truax said. "I have tested everything that we have any suspicion of that there might be trouble."

But he described the flight as a "hazardous venture" and said he would have preferred more tests of the "skycycle" which he compared to "an experimental aircraft built in a hurry on not quite enough money."

Bike madness goes rampant

Imitators Warned

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. John Moffat, a young Toronto surgeon, says that budding young Evel Knievels are risking their lives.

Ever since the motorcycle daredevil jumped safely over 13 trucks at the Canadian National Exhibition two weeks ago, youngsters here have been emulating him by pedalling their cycles up homemade ramps to see how far they can jump, some sailing over half a dozen friends lying on the ground.

"It's a dangerous hobby," Dr. Moffat said in an interview, after removing the ruptured spleen of an 11-year-old boy and setting the broken arm of another.

The boy's spleen had to be removed, he said, after he had fallen the day

P. K. Page—Collected but Incomplete

By GEORGE WOODCOCK

I have known Victoria for a quarter of a century now, and in all that time it has held a more important place than most of its people realize as a centre of Canadian poetry. When I arrived first in 1949, Alan Crawley was still editing from Victoria his influential journal, Contemporary Verse, and quite a number of his contributors came from the city and its vicinity.

A regular contributor to Contemporary Verse, even in those distant days, was P. K. Page, then a member of the Montreal group of poets associated with the magazine Preview. Now, when Contemporary Verse has long been a matter of memory and history — though Alan Crawley still lives on Vancouver Island — P. K. Page is an inhabitant of Victoria, as are so many other poets, including Dorothy Livesay, Robin Skelton and Gary Geddes.

that, if one cannot suggest the existence of anything so intimate as a Victoria school, one can at least consider the city one of the vital centres of Canadian verse-writing in the early 1970s.

The publication of P. K. Page's Poems Selected and New establishes her finally as a major modern Canadian poet. Many of us have long felt this was her role, and it might have become manifest earlier if P. K. had not, in her alter ego as P. K. Irwin, devoted so much talent and energy to the paintings which are the visual counterparts to her poems.

This is not the first retrospective volume that P. K. Page has published. Her admirers will remember that Cry Ararat!, which appeared in 1967, was subtitled Poems New and Selected, of which the present title is a subtle variation, and in addition to 17 new poems it contained others selected from her earlier volumes As Ten (Twenty 1946) and The Metal and the Flower (1954).

It also contained a number of P. K. Irwin's drawings, and though the process of reproduction did not do justice to the delicacy of these gossamer ghost-traps, there was nevertheless an interesting counterpointing of the poet and the draughtsman, which made all the more significant the fact that so many of P. K.'s poems take on even without illustration a strongly visual form in the imagination; one positively sees her angels (and her typhus) transfigured in the mind's eye.

Cry Ararat! was published as a selection rather than a definitive collection, which Poems Selected and New claims to be, at least according to the jacket blurb. In practice the difference is not so great as it would be with most Canadian poets. Cry Ararat! contains some 57 poems, and Poems Selected and New contains 85, half as many again. Every one of them, in my view, is a memorable poem, and the fact that this is shows not only that P. K. Page is — as I've already suggested — a major Canadian poet, but also that she has a rigorous self-critical sense such as most other Canadian poets lack.

Perhaps it is too rigorous. I am sure everyone who admires her work will find one or two of his favorite poems missing from this collection; I, for one, especially missed that haunting memento of her Australian experience, "Bark Drawing", which in six lines contains as fine an epitome as one could wish of her own mastery of two variant arts:

(an alphabet the eye lifts from the air as if by ear

two senses
a knuckle bone)

So I feel we should not accept this book as the final sum of P. K. Page's talents, the definitive collection. There are too many good past poems that have been left out, and there are, one hopes and expects, too many good future poems to be written. The real Collected Page should also — like Cry Ararat! — be illustrated by P. K. Irwin; her drawings reproduced in such a way as to preserve that fragile and evocative line which is the essence of her graphic expression.

Having said so much about what this book might have been, let me praise it now for what it is. To begin, one can only applaud the custom among Canadian poets, which I think Earle Birney began, of including in new collections good poems from past volumes.

This not only means that poems which have gone out of print are put back into circulation for a new readership. It also means that a poet like P. K. Page, whose poems are slight in number (compared with the production of poetry machines like Irving Layton), but fine in quality, is able to appear in volume form more often than if publishers insisted on waiting until she had enough new poems that satisfied her to make a volume.

Indeed, in P. K.'s case, to be reminded of her past poems is especially valuable, since the continuity between them and her recent poems is strong, and yet the development — or perhaps the refinement of philosophical tone — is equally pronounced. As well as a dozen or so new works, Poems Selected and New includes the best of those early poems in which the landscape of city alienation was charted out in the frustrations of office workers:

In the felt of the morning the calico-minded sufficiently starched, insert papers, hit keys, efficient and sure as their adding machines;
yet weep in the vault, they are taut
as net curtains stretched upon frames. In their eyes I have seen the pin men of madness in marathon trim race round the track of the stadium pupil.

And there are the fine later poems like "Cook's Mountains" and "After Rain" and "Cry Ararat!", in which the splendor of the appearance of things, which plays so great a part in P. K.'s poetic world, and which at times may seem to hinder her yearning for "the pure line," is subsumed in "the focus of the total I," where

All Ararat be conjured by a leaf.

The Sermon As Comedy

By PAT BARCLAY

Roch Carrier, who is best known to English-Canadian readers as the author of the La Guerre trilogy, has published a new novel in English translation. It's titled They Won't Demolish Me! (original French title: Le deux-mille étagé), and read it to appreciate the contribution which good French-English, English-French translation can make to our culture. For without the services of Sheila Fischman, who has worked closely with Carrier on the English versions of all four of his novels, most non-French-speaking Canadians would doubtless remain unaware of this major talent in our midst.

A good translator, like a good illustrator of children's stories, can make all the difference. Carrier novels contain an abundance of dialogue which, because his characters are nearly all Quebecois, is spoken in "joual." I'm in no position to judge the linguistic accuracy of Ms. Fischman's rendering of joual into English, but I'm quite sure that she has caught the spirit of that much-abused tongue very well indeed. Carrier's characters sound just right. And as they're nearly always talking, that's a real compliment.

They Won't Demolish Me! is the story of Dorval, a benevolent bachelor landlord with a prodigious thirst and a household of bizarre tenants. Dorval's house stands in a cheerfully shabby slum district of Montreal that is ripe for demolition and rapid transformation — into a sterile landscape of concrete highrises and plastic flower-gardens.

For Dorval was parachuted into France during the war and earned a certificate of honor working with the French underground. "Resistance" is the only course worth contemplating. With a refrigerator full of beer, and oratory that "crackles in the night like flags," he inspires his tenants to join him in a fight to the finish: "We've resisted the rats and we're going to resist the capitalists too!"

The pride and determination of Dorval are representative, Carrier shows, of every man who refuses to be mown down by inhuman technology. ("We dream of conquering the moon, but frosty old lady who gives you head colds. And why do we do it? Because the earth is uninhabitable. . . . The war isn't over! . . . They can dig my grave right under my feet and I'll still say Resistance! . . . A man that can stand on his own two feet and get a hard-on is bigger than any skyscraper.")

It would be a mistake, by the way, to write off Dorval as just another provincial veteran of the war. When a demolition-machine arrives at his door he invites the driver in for a beer and shows him his certificate of honor: "I can talk English" (says the driver) but I don't know how to read it too good." That ain't English (answers Dorval, it's French like you and me! But I hung up my certificate upside down to insult the army.)"

THEY WON'T DEMOLISH ME!, by Roch Carrier. Anansi, $6.50. Paperback $2.25.

Shawndithit died in St. John's on June 6, 1829. She was the last of Newfoundland's Beothuk Indian tribe; she was afraid that she would be unremembered and would be "left behind with no one to sing for her at the hour of her own death." Given the Christian name of Nancy, her grave was destroyed when the cemetery gave way to a city street.

Riverrun is a documentary novel dealing with the last 25 years of the Beothuk's existence.

RIVERRUN, by Peter Such Clarke, Irwin, $5.95.

One of Dorval's tenants is a pure food advocate forever singing the praises of the apple: "The apple was the heart of the Garden of Eden. Without the apple man is sad. He's an exile, a dying man who doesn't dare revive or die." And Dorval, in a burst of love for his tenants, describes his crowded household as "more beautiful than a fine apple tree laden with fruit."

Throughout the book Carrier continues this insistence on man as a natural organism, the antithesis of the cold-blooded machine. Dorval even tries to create another Eden as he and his tenants scratch in the poor soil of the demolition site, planting seeds. In the end, though, even Dorval has to admit a measure of defeat. He will continue to fight ("Men are alone on this earth . . . the only time I wasn't alone was when I was fighting"), but he will fight as he did in the war, underground.

Described this sketchily, They Won't Demolish Me! may sound a highly serious novel. It is serious, no doubt about that, but Carrier's comic ability turns what might have been a sermon on the soul-destroying aspects of "progress" into an always entertaining, often hilarious, romp. Readers who succumb to the temptations of reading aloud will find the wrestling scenes irresistible. (Two of Dorval's tenants are the Latereau brothers, mountaineers who have made a career of being thrown out of the ring.)

There is the Anglais hunt, when Dorval sends each of his followers after a pair of Anglais ears. (Everybody spends three days in jail, except the Anglais, of course, who all escape with ears unscathed.) Or there is the account of Dorval's career as the accidental landlord of a bordello, with a "phantom" in room number nine.

How Dorval deals with women as cold-hearted as any bulldozer, and how Carrier manages to work in several sly diggs at the French, are but two of the many more delights of this funny and provocative book. If you're looking for insight into Quebec, or if you're simply looking for a rewarding evening or two, you'll have a hard time finding either in better company.

THEY WON'T DEMOLISH ME!, by Roch Carrier. Anansi, $6.50. Paperback $2.25.

When Nonosabasut finds a whiteman's pocket watch I could immediately empathize: "That is one of the whiteman's talismans. Maybe it is kept for luck like my father's quartz crystals. Many times I've seen whitemen take this thing out of their clothes and open it and look at it, as if wondering what to taste. It takes its title from James Joyce's Finnegans Wake and is prefaced with the appropriate quotation: "A way a lone a last a loved a long the riverrun, past Eve and Adam's, from swerve of shore to bend of bay." Peter Such has carried on in the same aural tradition presenting us with a fine novel rich in poetic and visual imagery along with a firm commitment to historical detail.

The Beothuk were a nomadic tribe who annually covered a 300-mile territory from an inland lake where they wintered on fish and caribou, down river to the sea for the spring seal hunt. They were the first inhabitants of North America to encounter Europeans; their use of red ochre with which they smeared their bodies led to their being called "Red Indians"—a name that was later applied incorrectly to all other North American Indian tribes.

Riverrun tells about the life-style of the Beothuk. It is written from the point of view of a people as yet unexposed to the ways of European "civilization" (with the exception of 19th Century diary excerpts, letters and government documents from supposedly "concerned" but misguided individuals.) Every aspect of their life, from the building of deer fences to the preparation of their mameeteks (houses) is described in detail.—Peter Such has made these people so utterly believable that it is easy to identify with their bewilderment, their innocence, their pain, their suspicion, and their fears—to know each feeling for the first time and "lose yourself" in that experience.

When Nonosabasut finds a whiteman's pocket watch I could immediately empathize: "That is one of the whiteman's talismans. Maybe it is kept for luck like my father's quartz crystals. Many times I've seen whitemen take this thing out of their clothes and open it and look at it, as if wondering what to do. And then they would snap it shut and stop what they had been doing and go off and do something else. And once I saw a man shake it by his head and put his ear to it to listen to its spirit talking."

The novel begins in 1818 when the majority of the Beothuk have been wiped out by tuberculosis (the "cough-demon"), starvation, and the deliberate genocide by whitemen and their Micmac allies. (Evidence suggests that about this time three or four hundred Beothuk were herded onto a point of land near their favorite sealing-site and shot down like deer.)

Riverrun brings these Peoplene to life. It shows their respect and devotion to the elements, their awareness and their understanding of the magic in their environment. Their song was of the long lakes and the speaking rivers that ran to the sea forever. It was of the frogback rapids bearing only the dead leaves of the woods in autumn. But the Song of the People is not forgotten. Peter Such sings that Song again, and to listen to it is to echo it.

PORTRAIT FOR POSTERITY

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Light of intelligence and affection.

This book is not a biography, but a compilation of the incredibly detailed and perceptive journal entries kept throughout the 23 years by Craft.

Few musical giants in history have had the good fortune of so eloquent and closely linked a fellow traveller to paint brilliant verbal portraits for posterity. Those who read this book will come away feeling that they have known for a while, and well, the dominant and most unique musical genius of the 20th century.

A Passion to Find Where We Are

By ANNE McDougall

courage in asserting "The electron is a muskrat."

Her painstaking stalking takes on new meaning. She has a passion to find out where we are, what this place is like, how and why nature behaves in the prodigal, frantic, generous, violent way it does.

Why is 10 per cent of all world species made up of parasites? Why and how do silver eels get out of the sea, travel inland for eight years and then return to the salt water in a silver slithering mass to mate? What in all man's life is as awful as the munching of one preying mantis of another, during mating? Or the sucking of a frog alive by a huge water bug? If we can't understand these things, or even notice them, says Annie Dillard, how can we even face our own idiosyncrasies?

She quotes Pascal: "Every religion that does not affirm that God is hidden is not true." At times she concludes the whole creation is one lunatic fringe. The question from agnosticism is "Who turned on the lights?" and from faith: "Whatever for?"

Sir James Jeans, the British astronomer and physicist, has suggested that the universe was beginning to look more like a great thought than a great machine but Miss Dillard says this is hardly news. Who is thinking the carved tunnels of leaf miners on the face of a leaf?

This is no nature book. Annie Dillard takes off from the walkable patch she knows so well into the hovering realms of metaphysics, ethics, even quantum physics. She knows her Pliny as well as Heselberg and his Principle of Indeterminacy. Because it has been proved that you cannot know both a particle's velocity and its position she gains everywhere. The extravagant landscape of the world has been given with pizzazz and the grotesques and horrors bloom from that same free growth. She concludes that the wonder is that there is beauty at all, grace, gratitude, poignancy found, like a mockingbird's free fall.

She admits to her obsession and has to fight the urge to go up to someone at a party and say "Do you know that in the head of the caterpillar of the ordinary goat moth there are 228 separate muscles?" She wonders why she possesses this trivia machine. She goes sleepless, often aching from holding one position for too long, sometimes face down in the mud.

What she is trying to decipher comes clear in the chapter headings: Heaven and Earth in Jest, Seeing, Winter, The Fixed, Untying the Knot, The Present, Fecundity, Northing.

The writing is like crystal. The thoughts are profound but handled with a wry touch. It reads better in several sittings. Miss Dillard is a magazine writer, contributing to Harper's Magazine and writing a column for The Wilderness Society.

When I went to order the book I scrambled the title, coming up with The Tinker from Pilgrim Creek. At that stage the bookstore wasn't sure either. Now that I've read it, the scramble isn't so inappropriate. Miss Dillard is a "tinker" as well as a "pilgrim." But she has written some amazingly interesting things without once using the words environment or pollution.

The Mystical Guitar

By JOHN ROCKWELL

NEW YORK — The enormous adulation — even adoration — accorded such a confident instrumentalist as Eric Clapton on his current American tour is but the most recent proof of the place the electric guitar has gained in our musical life.

The electric guitar is the instrument most characteristic of popular music today. But it is more than that, and more than a mere amplified extension of the normal, acoustic guitar. It has become the inspirer of its own style of music, a classic instance of the medium affecting the message.

"Guitars in general are the common man's piano: relatively inexpensive and easy to play at a functional level, convenient to carry around and associated — especially since Bill Haley shook up the parental world with Rock Around the Clock in 1955 — with the machismo of the self-contained teenage subculture.

Both acoustic and electric instruments look roughly the same (apart from some of the more fantastical shapes that some custom-designed electric guitars have assumed) both use strings that one steps on a fretboard with the left hand and strums with the right. The chord patterns and fingering techniques on both kinds of guitars are transferable, at least in a general sense.

But the differences are pronounced, too — so pronounced that they suggest two different instruments altogether. The acoustic guitar (even with such enthusiastic variants as flamenco) is best suited to intimate expression. It is the perfect instrument for love music, for the soulful confidences of the folk singer. Even when it is translated into a large hall, by classical guitarists such as Andres Segovia, what sticks in the mind afterward is the image of tiny, delicate pins of sound reaching out into the vast hall.

With the electric guitar, the pins become giant hammers crashing on the eardrums. The nature of amplification has reached such a level that everything affects the sound of the instrument, from the slightest pluck to a sleeve brushing against the strings to the performer's body of the guitar. That volume has enabled guitarists to take the leading role in bands: no longer, nor ever again, need they worry about being drowned out.

A true electric guitar — unlike an amplified acoustic guitar — is a piece of electronic equipment. In the older instrument, the plucked string set up resonances in a sound box. In an electric, the action of plucking the string disturbs a magnetic field within the instrument, and that disturbance is transferred through coils wrapped around the magnet to an amplifier, and then to loudspeakers. The signal can be modified by any number of bits off electronic gimmickry, from frequency filters to fuzz boxes to wah-wah pedals.

Perhaps the most striking ability of these modern guitars, when compared with their acoustic predecessors, is the way they can spin out long legato lines. After the initial contact with the string, the resultant sound has to decay into eventual inaudibility (unlike the organ, which sustains a note as long as a key is depressed).

With the electric guitar, however, the amplification can prolong the decay, so that guitarists like George Harrison, Roy Buchanan, and Clapton, can make the instrument seem to sing, linking notes songfully together — or it "gently weeps," as Jerry Garcia and Keith Richard.

Wah-wah and echo effects increase the rhythmic complexity of a guitar line, not to speak of their strange sound colors.

All of these new instrumental sounds have resulted in a music totally different from guitar music in the pre-electrical era. Electric guitar music can be massive and overwhelming, a gargantuan cacophony of chordal color. Or, it can be simple and pure, the sound stretching out lazily between the notes.

Above all, its range of possibilities has multiplied immeasurably: in terms of variety, the electric guitar stands to the acoustic guitar as the mighty Wurlitzer stands to a

The first really popular electric guitars came out in the nineteen thirties, but it was not until 1948 that the first widely distributed solid body guitar (one that dispensed with the resonating hollow body needed for an acoustic instrument) reached the market. By the early fifties most jazz bands used amplified or electric guitars, but only after the rise of rock in the mid-fifties did the rock guitar begin its ascendancy.

Since then, there have been numerous notable jazz electric guitarists, and even an occasional serious, classical piece that makes use of the instrument. But the true exponents of the electric guitar's sound potential were electrified black bluesmen like B. B. King and white and black blues-rockers.

It was they more than any others who revealed the variety hidden within these unassuming bits of wood or plastic. Aside from Clapton, Harrison, and Buchanan, other well known, inventive rock guitarists today include Jerry Garcia and Keith Richard.

All of them, however, owe a large debt to the late Jimi Hendrix, the black bluesman turned rocker. Anyone who saw the film of the Woodstock Festival will remember Hendrix's astonishing version of "The Star-Spangled Banner," complete with screams and walls and machine-guns bursts and diving exploding bombs — all produced by one man, alone, onstage, with nothing but his electric guitar.

Hendrix gave us the best vision not only of what an electric guitar can do, but of the almost mystical way in which electric guitarists relate to their instruments.

Bastion Hitting the Road With Three Productions

A "first" for Bastion Theatre will see a long-cherished dream become a reality when the company goes on the road this winter with three of its mainstage productions.

With financial sponsorship from the Du Maurier Council for the Arts, Canada Council Touring Office and local community organizations, six Vancouver Island communities will be treated to the comedies, The Fourposter, Butley, and Eric Nicol's Like Father, Like Son. The productions, to be shown at the McPherson Playhouse in November, January, and March respectively, will visit Duncan-Cowichan, Nanaimo, Parksville-Qualicum, Port Alberni, Courtenay-Cox Bay, and Campbell River.

In addition the Victoria season includes Ibsen's A Doll's House, the comedy Arsenic and Old Lace, and the musical The Fantasticks.

Artistic director of Bastion, Edwin Stephenson, says that afternoon workshops and evening dialogues with audiences will be included in the up-island visits.

Bonus attractions Bastion is bringing to Victoria this season include Tom Kneebone and Dinah Christie in their successful revue-style salute to Noel Coward and Cole Porter. This will play for three nights at the Royal Theatre.

There will be a five-play children's theatre season opening Oct. 5 in the Bastion studio at 538 Yates Street, and for the first time the young theatre buffs can do as the grown-ups do and obtain season tickets.

Opening show is entitled Astrid the Ostrich and the director is dancer-comedienne Gini Lefever. In the cast are Anne Crawford, Terry McColligan, Barry Grimshaw, Susan Goldwater and Greg Gurr.

Included also in the children's season are Names and Nicknames by James Reaney, a Hans Andersen special at Christmas, The Dancing Donkey by Erik Vos and Nuts and Bolts and Rusty Things.

Sylvia Hosie and founding director Peter Mander will be directing the productions.

Bastion's 12th year of theatre school classes begins Oct. 14. Registrations are being accepted now for all age groups. Some scholarships are available for deserving students. Application forms are available at the office, 30 Bastion Square, or by phoning 382-4112 or 385-6123.

AMAHL RETURNS

A Christ Church Cathedral Christmas season tradition that started in 1959 but has been absent for the last five years will be revived this Christmas.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's appealing hour-long opera, Amahl and the Night Visitors, will be performed in the cathedral during the week between Christmas and New Year.

The opera was performed four times at three-year intervals with frequent requests that it should be done annually. Its performance, however, is predicated upon the availability of a suitable boy soprano for the leading role.

Original directors for the cathedral were Richard Proudfit, then organist and choirmaster, and Audrey Johnson with Maurice Johnson as technical and lighting director. The four boys who performed the central role were Timothy Vernon, Jonathan Peter, Bill Dyson and Jeffrey Finch.

The performance this year will be under the musical direction of the present cathedral organist, Beal Thomas and possibility of using the full orchestral score is under consideration.

Times music-drama writer Audrey Johnson will act in an over-all advisory capacity.

Open auditions for the role of the boy, Amahl, the three kings and the page, will be held and anyone interested should arrange a time by phoning the cathedral office, 386-7781.

'Dancenergy' Repeated

Two courses dealing with the arts of movement and dance will be available this fall at the Northwest Coast Institute of the Arts at 505 Fort Street.

Cellist in Recital

First recital of the early fall season takes place Sept. 15 at 8 p.m. at McPherson Playhouse.

The artist is an outstanding cellist, Yo-Yo Ma, who will be partnered at the piano by Lee Kum-Sing. The 19-year-old cellist is an experienced and acclaimed concert artist, having given his first solo recital in Paris at the age of six.

At 12 years he played with the San Francisco Little Symphony and Arthur Bloomfield in the S.F. Examiner counted him "in the same category as Starker, Rose, Varga, Piatigorsky and Casals."

His program Sunday includes Five Pieces in Folk Style by Schumann, Bach's Suite No. 2 in D minor for unaccompanied cello, Schubert and Brahms sonatas and two pieces by Chinese composers.

He studied with Rose at the Juilliard School in New York and performed, at the suggestion of Casals, with Leonard Bernstein over national television. He has also appeared with the Boston Pops, Venezuela Symphony and Brooklyn Symphony and in the Marlboro Festival with some of the world's most distinguished artists.

The ensemble was born in this city, the offspring of UVic's progenitor, Victoria College.

Victoria College Chorale evolved under the guidance of conductors Patrick White, Ken Oliphant and for a longer period, Rodney Webster, under whom, in 1964, it took the name Amity.

Last spring, after directing the group for four seasons and bringing it a wide réputation, George Corwin, UVic choir and orchestra director, resigned.

The new director, selected following correspondence and auditions with several out-of-town conductors, is Timothy Vernon.

Twenty-eight-year-old Vernon is almost a native son of this city. His student musical career here was remarkable and he achieved a brilliant record during four years in Vienna where he was a student of world-famous teacher of the art of conducting, Hans Swarowsky.

Swarowsky described Vernon as his best pupil in 10 years since, in fact, Zubin Mehta. On one occasion he introduced the young Canadian to Hans Sacha, musical director of Austrian radio and television saying, "Here is my top conductor. His name is Vernon. Take note of that name and that face."

Vernon will conduct his first full performances of Amity Singers at season opening dual concerts Oct. 29 and 30.

There will be a touch of Vienna in the occasions which will be, for Victoria, quite unique. Amity's new image as well as its new season will be ushered in with glamour and a meet-the-conductor informality.

The twin events, announced as Candlelight and Wine concerts, will take place in the Empress Hotel ballroom with the audience seated around tables for six.

The program will consist of

madrigals and folksongs with the conductor providing translations where necessary and background notes.

Other plans outlined by Vernon for the complete season include a Christmas program of late Renaissance and mid-20th century music, a motet program in early spring and a program devoted to music of the mass in which the chorus will be assisted by an orchestra, scheduled for late April.

But before all this some changes will be made. After the auditions being held early next week, Amity will probably emerge as a somewhat smaller group.

"Our aim," says John Paddington, public relations member of Amity, "is to become in size and quality a true and fine chamber ensemble."

He tells you that the executive headed by new president Gall O'Riordan (nee Wall), a well known Victoria pianist, has agreed to accept whatever decision is made and will continue to work toward the Amity goal even if no longer singing with the group.

Expansion plans also call for the taking of at least two concerts to up-island centres.

Amity has reason to anticipate additional funding this week through a Canada Council grant, says Paddington.

The Council has expressed warm interest in the current developments under a conductor who was more than once a recipient of full Canada Council student grants.

At the same time that he is guiding the artistic destiny of ambitious Amity, Vernon will be commuting to Vancouver where he was recently appointed conductor and music director of a new fully professional 40-piece ensemble sponsored by the Columbia Society for the Arts.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 45-year-old man who went 11 years without criminal convictions was given concurrent one-year terms when sentenced in provincial court Friday for 12 offences.

John Edward Stevens, 45, of 3164 Gamma, earlier pleaded guilty to seven counts of uttering forged cheques, and break and entry in Victoria, and a four-count Kelowna charge of obtaining cash or goods by worthless cheques.

The cheques uttered in Victoria were worth $924.

The charge of break and entry concerned entering a Victoria car firm's premises in 1966.

Judge William Ostler called Stevens a "pathetic object" who suffers from a severe case of rejection.

He also said Stevens had an affliction for alcohol, and recommended he serve his time in the Alouette River Unit for alcoholics.

The court was told earlier Stevens had been convicted in 1963 of uttering forged documents, theft and false pretences.

A Port Alberni fisherman was fined $275 and had a portion of his net forfeited to the Crown after he pleaded guilty to a two-count charge of violating the B.C. Fishery Regulations.

Norman Bonk, 48, fished for salmon at 12:30 p.m. Monday with a gillnet and failed to produce a personal commercial fishing licence.

Circumstances of the offences, which occurred in the Juan de Fuca Strait, were not given.

Discussing whether the Crown should get the net, Bonk said, "There's no way I can afford another net."

He said without the net he would be out of business.

"Does the Crown... really want to put him out of business?" Ostler asked Macdonald.

Macdonald replied he had been instructed to ask for forfeiture and told the court Bonk had another net.

Two Saskatchewan men received jail terms after being found guilty of committing a common assault on a Sooke man.

James Cappo, 22, was sentenced to 23 days, and his uncle, Raymond Faulds, 35, was given 53 days.

The pair had been charged with robbing Brian Swift, 25, of $587 Sooke, with violence of about $1.50 in an attack Aug. 3 in the 1600-block Store.

Working for $116 resulted in an American being fined $250. John Edward Zottoli, 28, of no fixed address, worked as a street cleaner in Vancouver Aug. 7-12 for Westrock Industries, but he did not have a work permit from the manpower and immigration department.

Prosecutor Gordon Macdonald said Zottoli, in custody on other matters, entered Canada using another name than at Windsor.

Ostler said it was an economic necessity of all countries to decide who has the right to work, otherwise there would be chaos.

Leonard Gerald Hughes, 23, of CFB Work Point Barracks, pleaded guilty to shoplifting two cartons of cigarettes Thursday from Maverick Market, 880 Esquimalt.

Hughes, fined $200, told the court he had gone to the counter, but had left when nobody was there.

He was chased by store employees.

Kim Rene Zigay, 19, of Otter Point Road, Sooke, was fined $75 for possessing marijuana.

Glen Herald Kristjan, 50, 1321 Balmoral, was given a suspended sentence and six months' probation for the same offence.

David Bernard Foster, 44, of 345 Michigan, was fined $500 and banned from driving for two years for impaired driving, and Gregory Thomas Sam, 27, of 1276 Stellis Cross Road, was fined $350 and banned from driving for four months for the same offence.

Keith Marshall Andrew, 19, of CFB Esquimalt, was fined $300 and banned from driving for 40 days for driving with a blood-alcohol level of more than .08 per cent.

He said without the net he would be out of business.

"Does the Crown... really want to put him out of business?" Ostler asked Macdonald.

Macdonald replied he had been instructed to ask for forfeiture and told the court Bonk had another net.

Old Magic of Theatre Night To Mark McPherson Comedy

A theatre evening with that old magic including limousines delivering patrons at the red-carpeted entrance to the McPherson Playhouse, will mark the two gala performances of LaBonna Unchained, scheduled for Sept. 19 and 20.

LaBonna's composer and co-lyricist, Charles Barber, says that anyone who exchanges jeans or minis for long dresses for the occasion may step into a free limousine at the corner of Blanshard and Pandora and be shuttled to the theatre in style.

The original musical comedy about "a woman who makes men suffer" is a two-act show containing 13 songs, five dances, an overture and finale.

Greg Walsh has teamed with Barber in the book and lyrics and the conductor and arranger is Thomas Durrie, coach and repetiteur of the Vancouver Opera Association.

The director is Gary Pogrow, the genial, enormously gifted and professional theatre man who is well known both in Victoria and on the mainland for his imaginative work along creative lines.

Heading the cast is Donna Warren, a sultry contralto, as LaBonna. Significant characters are being played by John Heath in a spider-like role; Charles Dorrington, Rupert Downing, Robert Price (leader of the hoboes), and Sandy Harris.

Concert mistress of the 26-piece orchestra is Trudi Conrad. Most of the musicians are being drawn from the Victoria Symphony and Conservatory of Music.

There are 32 people in the cast representing theatre and choral organizations of Greater Victoria.

All participants are working without fee, including Pogrow who has come over from Vancouver at his own expense to stay in Victoria throughout the rehearsal period. Barber says that the cast will have put in 200 strenuous hours of rehearsal by opening night.

Total proceeds will go to Victoria Cool-Aid as a benefit for the Youth Resources Centre mortgage.

During intermission the Baroque Quintet will perform and there will be an art exhibit in the upper lounge.

cut out for the inside passage

The ocean voyage between Kelsey Bay and Prince Rupert takes you along 330 miles of the magnificent Inside Passage. Board the British Columbia Ferries' flagship "Queen of Prince Rupert" this fall for a once-in-a-lifetime cruise through fjord-like waterways... past snow-dusted mountain peaks, glaciers and towering waterfalls. Fine seafoods, stateroom accommodations and the most spectacular scenery in the world await you. Take your car or camper aboard and continue your adventure by land, along the colourful and historic Totem Circle Route. The fishing's great. Explore Skeena Indian villages and see restored Ksan. Visit the goldrush town of Barkerville, in the Cariboo. Marvel at the forbidding ramparts of the Thompson and Fraser Canyons.

Every British Columbian plans to travel the Inside Passage someday, and there are two good reasons why that someday should be SOON. First, the trip is never more beautiful than in the fall. Second, the trip is never more ECONOMICAL than this fall. AFTER SEPTEMBER 25, YOU CAN SAVE 25% OFF THE REGULAR QUEEN OF PRINCE RUPERT FARE.

MONEY SAVERS

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

They don't make the headlines.

They're not there when the medals are handed out.

But in this inflationary period when overburdened taxpayers condemn the spiralling costs of government the best "buy" in any government department is the staff of the materials engineering section of the Defence Research Establishment Pacific at CFB Esquimalt.

These unsung "backroom boys" save the taxpayers' millions of dollars through the research and day-to-day testing carried out in their laboratories.

They make the lives of servicemen safer. They also play a part in ensuring that ships and other armed forces equipment last longer function better and make breakthroughs that are copied by navies of other countries.

All this with a staff of less than 20.

Even a reporter unversed in scientific jargon comes away from the unpretentious building inside the main gates convinced it is the "heart" that pumps physical health into all the limbs of Canada's armed forces, but particularly the ships of the Pacific command.

Department head Ralph Barer emphasized that, although most of the work done in the DREP department is for the navy, the scientists and technical staff also solve problems that crop up in the air force and army.

Helicopter blades, structural members, landing gear of planes and gun parts are part of the inventory studied for the other two services.

Recently fears of officials at CFB Comox when they discovered what appeared to be a lubricant leak from a CF101 jet were proven unfounded.

On examination by Dick Sewell's organic chemistry section, the "black gunk turned out to be a sealant", Barer reported.

Advances made in combating corrosion, later copied by other navies, and long-range studies of paint by the section headed by Jack Carson, have drastically cut the amount of time when ships are in drydock and inoperational.

"Ships used to dock every six months or so because of fouling or corrosion," Barer said. "Now they can go as long as 30 or 40 months."

Protective anodes, situated on the outside of a ship's bottom and inside her bilges have been found to counteract corrosion that once ruined propellers and stopped the need to replace plates, once vulnerable to corrosion in the bilges.

Clint Waggoner was responsible for an on-the-spot testing system of materials that is now being carried on by ships at sea.

He initiated it by having simple equipment installed aboard the destroyer-escort HMCs Yukon. A technician travelled in Yukon for a month, teaching some of the ship's crew testing procedures.

The pilot project worked and now, a more sophisticated testing program is in operation in the supply ship HMCs Provider, as well as her sister ships on the east coast, HMCs Preserver and HMCs Protector.

The afloat program means that on-the-spot testing reduces the odds against major problems developing.

An example of this is the HMCs Terra Nova which, with other Esquimalt ships, was due to leave Hawaii after an exercise.

Samples flown from the ship to Esquimalt showed that a bearing was breaking down. A message was sent to the ship, reaching her hours before she was due to leave, warning her of the danger.

"If nothing had been done she would have had to make it back on one main shaft," Waggoner said. "This way we were able to avoid a lot of lost time at sea."

Carson's department and the Metallurgy and Non-Destructive Testing section headed by Frank Peters combined forces to grapple with one of the navy's most recent problems.

Four Esquimalt-based destroyer-escorts were equipped with expensive variable sonar devices thought to cost in the neighborhood of $250,000 each.

Through some fault, at least three of the devices have been plagued with problems. HMCs Restigouche, as an instance, lost hers in 3,800 feet of water off the west coast of Vancouver Island in May.

It's been discovered that the head which connected the cable to the device was overly vulnerable to corrosion. This has been rectified and Barer says while it may not be the entire answer, it will certainly prolong use by hundreds of hours.

Also, it was found cable, imported from an English manufacturer, was faulty, having "kinks" in the electrical conductors. Now each piece of expensive cable is examined under X-ray.

The spiralling use of synthetics, particularly plastics, complicates probing causes of fire under normal circumstances.

But, by making gaschromatographs with equipment that breaks down the components under varying heat conditions, the scientific probes have been able to pin down the causes of fire from tiny particles of remains sent to them.

Oil analysis, also used by certain segments of the civilian industry, is used to assess the degree of machinery failure.

By using an Atomic Absorption Spectrometer, the particles of metal in a lubricant will give an accurate gauge of how far the metal has deteriorated.

It was testing by this machine that saved the Terra Nova from serious problems on her trip back from Hawaii.

Day by day, the scientists and their staff carry out these and many other functions, going unnoticed as they leave through the dockyard gate as each day ends.

Heroes?

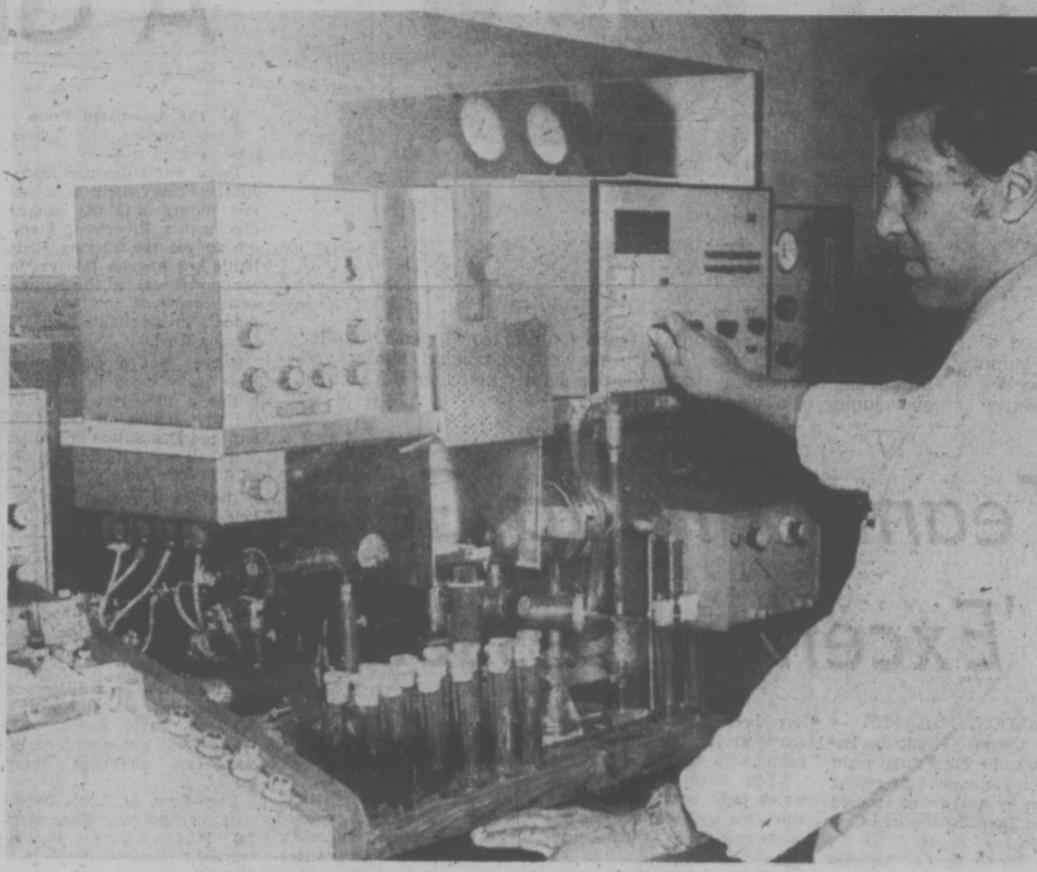

They'd be the last to admit it.

As Barer says:

"My people feel strongly that the support we get from people in the service, and the way some of them have fought for our ideas is the key to our success."

"We couldn't have done it without them."

Luckily for the overtaxed taxpayer, they keep on doing it...

Technical officer Harry Dominique makes an oil analysis, using the Atomic Absorption Spectrometer

It seemed to be barely skirting the law. And, it also looked like time to give someone a dressing down.

The classified advertisement read in part "waiter or waitress wanted . . . must wear skirt . . ."

So a Times reporter did; going the whole (male chauvinist) hog, clad in a nifty gold and black lame number that stopped traffic on Douglas.

Unfortunately, the position had been filled—as soon as it was advertised, according to Mrs. Gerry Taylor, wife of the owner of Caesar's Italian Village, 1513 Douglas.

A female had taken it. One with "a fair amount of experience" as a cashier, part of the work needed, according to Mrs. Taylor.

No men had applied.

If, however, one had and "had been suitable," he would have "got the job, no doubt about it," Mrs. Taylor added.

Why, you might ask, apply for a second job? My dear, have you seen the price of pantyhose lately?

Ah well, that's the way the pizza crumbles . . . and the whole thing would have been a drag, anyhow.

The Victoria Public Library has several books on religious medallions, but no one book will give all the information on all medallions. The books are specialized and deal with medallions made during specific periods of religious history.

Most career programs, such as criminal justice or medical laboratory technology, were full to their maximum capacity, she said. Last year most had several empty spaces.

Love of Jesus Showdown Set

A trial in B.C. Supreme Court opens in Victoria Tuesday to settle a decade of feuding between two factions within the Society of the Love of Jesus.

At issue is who controls the society, with assets estimated at $1.5 million.

The society's assets include the St. Mary's Priory property at Langford where one faction is operating an extended care hospital and a home for senior citizens.

The Priory building was the scene last year of a seven-month "sit-in" by three members of the other faction after an attempt was made to lock them from the building.

The two factions have been described as the "traditional" group and the "modern" group. The society itself is associated with the Benedictine order of the Roman Catholic Church.

The traditional group is led by Mother Cecilia Mary, 85, founder and head of the society for many years and now operating an animal shelter at Mill Bay.

With her are Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan, and Mary Lucy Forde, the trio who conducted the sit-in, and Sister Mary Julia Kelly, who assists Mother Cecilia at the animal shelter.

The modern faction is headed by Sister Leonette Hoesing, mother prioress, and includes Sisters Mary Grace Neider, Mary Elizabeth Dumbowsky and Mary Patricia Jones.

The traditional group is suing the society to gain control of it and its property.

Camosun Courses Crammed

Most courses offered at Camosun College's Lansdowne campus were packed when registration closed at the college Friday.

Admissions officer Mary Ellen King said 1,700 students have enrolled for Lansdowne courses, with a substantial increase in the number of full-time students over last year.

Most career programs, such as criminal justice or medical laboratory technology, were full to their maximum capacity, she said. Last year most had several empty spaces.

King said several programs, such as the new visual arts program, were forced to keep their student enrollment down because of limited classroom space.

Unsung 'Backroom Boys' Saving Taxpayers Millions of Dollars

HMCS Preserver and HMCS Protector.

The afloat program means that on-the-spot testing reduces the odds against major problems developing.

An example of this is the HMCs Terra Nova which, with other Esquimalt ships, was due to leave Hawaii after an exercise.

Samples flown from the ship to Esquimalt showed that a bearing was breaking down. A message was sent to the ship, reaching her hours before she was due to leave, warning her of the danger.

"If nothing had been done she would have had to make it back on one main shaft," Waggoner said. "This way we were able to avoid a lot of lost time at sea."

Carson's department and the Metallurgy and Non-Destructive Testing section headed by Frank Peters combined forces to grapple with one of the navy's most recent problems.

Four Esquimalt-based destroyer-escorts were equipped with expensive variable sonar devices thought to cost in the neighborhood of $250,000 each.

Through some fault, at least three of the devices have been plagued with problems. HMCs Restigouche, as an instance, lost hers in 3,800 feet of water off the west coast of Vancouver Island in May.

It's been discovered that the head which connected the cable to the device was overly vulnerable to corrosion. This has been rectified and Barer says while it may not be the entire answer, it will certainly prolong use by hundreds of hours.

Also, it was found cable, imported from an English manufacturer, was faulty, having "kinks" in the electrical conductors. Now each piece of expensive cable is examined under X-ray.

The spiralling use of

synthetics, particularly plastics, complicates probing causes of fire under normal circumstances.

But, by making gaschromatographs with equipment that breaks down the components under varying heat conditions, the scientific probes have been able to pin down the causes of fire from tiny particles of remains sent to them.

Oil analysis, also used by certain segments of the civilian industry, is used to assess the degree of machinery failure.

By using an Atomic Absorption Spectrometer, the particles of metal in a lubricant will give an accurate gauge of how far the metal has deteriorated.

Through testing by this machine that saved the Terra Nova from serious problems on her trip back from Hawaii.

Day by day, the scientists and their staff carry out these and many other functions, going unnoticed as they leave through the dockyard gate as each day ends.

Heroes?

They'd be the last to admit it.

As Barer says:

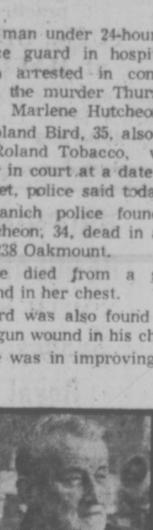

"My people feel strongly that the support we get from people in the service, and the way some of them have fought for our ideas is the key to our success."

"We couldn't have done it without them."

Reward for Toil, a Vine-Ripe Tomato

THIS MORNING WE reaped one of the rewards of hard labor. Win took her colander from the hook in a kitchen cupboard, and with me trailing after her, set out to harvest the first of our Salt Spring Sunrise tomatoes.

We resisted the impulse. A vine-reddened tomato has a flavor that no vegetable or fruit finished off indoors can duplicate. It's like eating Spring Sunrise tomatoes.

The first Salt Spring Sunrise, when we gave it a final inspection, lived up to our expectations. It was well-shaped and large, though not flamboyantly so. Its color was perfect—a rich and uniform red.

More Structured School Urged For Lansdowne

BY SUSAN RUTTAN

Lansdowne junior secondary school should be converted into a high school extension of the "more structured" Sentinel elementary school, Greater Victoria school board administrators advocated.

Administrators will present this and other recommendations to the board's administration committee Monday intended to advance the board's alternative schools policy.

Under the proposal, Lansdowne would become Grade 8 to 12 high school by 1978.

Sentinel elementary, now at 3861 Cedar Hill Crossroad, should be moved to the Dean Heights school building just down the street from Lansdowne, say the recommendations.

Dean Heights, now a junior high school for slow learners, should be disbanded, they say.

One class of the Dean

Heights students could be put in a class at the Greater Victoria Association for the Retarded's sheltered workshop, with a teacher paid by the school board.

The rest could go to a new junior vocational school which should be set up to serve the Capital Region, says the report.

The school would serve the total region, and would offer work experience and special courses to prepare students for advanced study in the senior grades, or for the world of work," says the report.

Until such a school is built, S. J. Willis junior secondary could serve such a purpose.

Administrators were uncertain where a high school equivalent of Sundance elementary school, the "less-structured" school, could be set up, but suggested that the Mt. View high school building be used for it.

Sentinel and Sundance were both established last

Lions Revamp Lineup

There will be a few "firsts" to stir up extra interest as Canadian Football League clubs go back to work this weekend in four games, two in the Western Conference and two in the East.

British Columbia Lions, sending out a revamped lineup due to injuries, will be at home tonight against Saskatchewan Roughriders with defensive end Bill Baker making his first start against his former clubmates.

"Every game is important," says Baker, a two-time all-Canadian traded to the Lions in the off-season, "but I guess the one against Saskatchewan is the most important for me this season."

Coch Eagle Keys has shuffed his Lions, replacing slotback Jim Young, sidelined by a dislocated shoulder, with Monroe Eley and moving Lou Harris into Eley's halfback position. Johnny Musso, the leading Lion rusher last season, returns to action after recovering from a knee injury that knocked him out of the first six games.

At Edmonton Sunday, quarterback Chuck Ealey will be making his first start for Winnipeg Blue Bombers since being acquired from Hamilton in a trade for Don Jonas.

Deadlocked for the conference lead with the Lions and Roughriders, the Eskimos will probably see more of rookie quarterback Ralph Brock, who is scheduled to start Ealey, working to learn the Winnipeg playbook, will be available for spot duty.

Jones was expected to make his debut with the Tiger-Cats today when they moved into Ottawa to play the Rough Riders, who are still smarting from an 11-10 loss last weekend in Hamilton.

Joe Moss will be handling the head-coach position for the first time as he takes the Toronto Argonauts into Montreal for a Sunday clash with the Alouettes, 12-11, winners last weekend in Toronto.

Moss, an assistant coach who accepted the job as head coach on an interim basis when John Rauch was fired earlier this week, apparently has one major decision to make on the Argo roster.

With ace flanker Eric Allen out with a knee injury, he must pick a replacement from James Davis or Chuck Herd, two cuts from the National Football League.

Times Final Features Pair Making a Return to Tennis

LIZ-ANNE OGDEN
...badminton champ

A.B.C. badminton champion who hasn't played tennis since she left school and a woman who "has never won any kind of tournament" will meet in the women's singles final of the Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis Tournament.

The summer-long tournament winds up Saturday, Sept. 28, with finals in all four events — men's, women's, boys' and girls' singles — followed by the presentation of prizes, at Henderson Park courts.

Liz-Anne Ogden, 20 Helmenen, B.C. junior badminton singles champion for the last three years in a row and the current holder of the provincial junior titles in singles, women's doubles and mixed doubles, plays Jo-Anne Stone, 649 Langford, in the final.

Miss Ogden, 19, in her third year at the University of Victoria and currently on a teaching assignment at South Park School, admits her Tennis is "a bit rusty" as she hasn't played since leaving school until she "took it up again a bit this season."

But her mother says Liz-

Anne was highly promising in tennis as a youngster and feels she could have gone a long way in the sport if she hadn't decided to concentrate on badminton instead.

"She started tennis at the age of 12 in Gordon Hartley's municipal program and won every public parks tournament she ever played in," Mrs. Ogden said Friday.

Mrs. Stone, 24, is graduate of Simon Fraser University in Burnaby and is a research worker under the Career 74 program at the Department of Municipal Affairs' Bureau of Transit Services.

Although she played a lot of tennis "at around the age of 13," Mrs. Stone said Friday she has only just started taking it up again and has never won a tournament in any kind of sport.

Linda Weech was Wendy Lafave in the under-18 girls' singles final.

The boys' singles event is through to the semi-final stage and the men's event, which drew a massive 89 entries, has reached the quarter-finals. Players in these two events have been given until 5 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 12, to get their next rounds played and have the results back in to the Times.

Results and draws:

MEN'S

Quarter-finals: Jim Temple def. Bert Westervelt; Peter Thompson 9-2; Bert Westervelt defeated Ken Clegg 6-4; Jim Temple vs. Gord Booth defeated Tim Markland 9-4; Gord Booth defeated Roland Maser 9-2; Gord Booth vs. Gord Liebscher 9-4; Gary Lokken defeated Henry Holchink 9-3.

Semi-finals: Jim Temple vs. Shirley Bhandar 9-2; Liz-Anne Ogden defeated Jane Welch 9-4.

BOYS'

Quarter-finals: Jim Temple vs. Arthur Underhill; Bert Westervelt vs. Tom Dumanic; Greg Booth vs. Gord Liebscher.

Semi-finals: Greg Booth vs. Rob Spanier; Dunc McLellan vs. Jimy Bhalla.

CBC PONDERING HOCKEY REQUEST

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Broadcasting Corp. will decide next week whether to allow its affiliated television stations in outlying areas to carry games of the Canada-Soviet hockey series, that have been allocated to the CBC network.

A CBC spokesman said Friday the move is being considered following receipt of a 5,000-name petition from Terrace, B.C. residents who urged the corporation to allow British Columbians to broadcast all eight games of the upcoming series.

CTV and CBC will each carry four of the games. CTV, which has no signal in the Terrace area about 500 miles northwest of Vancouver, has granted permission to CFTK-TV owners, Skeena Broadcasting Ltd., to broadcast its half of the series.

Rain Cancels Today's Play at Forest Hills

Times News Services

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. — A steady overnight rain that continued into the morning forced postponement of today's program of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

As a result, the continuation of the women's singles semifinals between Chris Evert and Evonne Goolagong now is scheduled for Sunday and the men's singles final will have to be carried over to Monday.

When rain halted play Friday afternoon, the top-seeded

Miss Evert was only two games from defeat after Miss Goolagong had leaped to a 6-0, 4-3 lead. Billie Jean King, meanwhile, moved within a step of her fourth Open women's singles title.

Earlier, Mrs. King, 30, had shaken off an early lethargy for a 2-6, 6-3, 6-1 triumph over unseeded Julie Heldman.

The centre-court star was stunned when Miss Goolagong raced through six straight games in sweeping the first set from Miss Evert.

The Australian star, who won the Wimbledon crown at the age of 20 in 1971, had failed to live up to her potential in succeeding tournaments, although she won the Australian title earlier this year.

Miss Evert, on the other hand, had swept to 10 straight tournament triumphs — including the Italian and French Opens and Wimbledon — and had dropped only one set in amassing a string of 56 consecutive match victories.

But she was lost when the talented Miss Goolagong opened the lid to her marvelous stroke-making repertoire.

Burnaby Rated Underdog

PETERBOROUGH (CP) — A lot is expected of Peterborough PCs.

The club goes into its fourth straight Canadian Lacrosse Association junior Minto Cup final Sunday, at New Westminster, against Burnaby Cablevision, with a little added pressure.

A win this year — it would be their third title in a row — is expected. What eastern junior fans don't expect is a long series. PCs in four or five games of the best-of-seven series. Anything more would be an upset is the prevailing feeling among their fans.

What else can be expected from a club that rewrote the Ontario Lacrosse Association's junior A record book this year? Losing is unknown to the Peterborough club this season. It has won 42 consecutive games. In the last three years, the PCs have lost just twice in 84 regular season games.

Johnston also set an OLA record for most points in a game — 18.

PCOs had three other players over the 100-point mark this year — Brian Evans 130, Steve Plunkett 116 and Randy Bryan 108. Ken Byers, Guy Legault and Bryan were the other 50-goal scorers.

All but one of coach Ben Floyd's players have Minto Cup experience.

It's the type of depth that has the coach thinking his club just might satisfy the Peterborough fans with a quick series win.

New Tennis Body Formed

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — The ILTF and the ATP have come up with a marriage that has produced an offspring called MIPTF.

Formation of the Men's International Professional Tennis Council was announced jointly Friday by the International Lawn Tennis Association and the Association of Tennis Professionals.

The council, which will consist of three members of each body plus the president of the ILTF, will regulate all men's tournaments offering prize money in excess of $17,500.

ONTARIO GOLFER TOPS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lars Melander of Oakville, Ont., won the Canadian Professional Golfers Association Assistants' championship Friday.

He turned in three consecutive rounds of 69 for a 54-hole total of 207 and a two-stroke margin over defending champion Roger Klatt of Edmonton.

The tournament was played at Marine Drive Golf Club.

Melander won $1,000, a trophy and berths in the 1975 Canadian Open and Canadian PGA tournaments.

Al Paterson of Toronto had Friday's best round — a five-under-par course record 66 — finishing with 211.

Griffins Pad Series Lead

MONTREAL — Montreal Quebecers will be attempting to reduce a 24 deficit when they return to their home floor Sunday for the third game in their best-of-seven National Lacrosse League semi-final series against Rochester Griffins.

Playing before 1,544 Rochester fans Friday night, the Griffins snatched a 13-12 decision when Graeme Gair fired his second goal of the game with less than two minutes remaining.

Jim Lynch of Victoria, voted the league's rookie-of-the-year, scored twice for Montreal.

Sprint Double

ROME (AP) — Irene Szwinska, a 28-year-old Polish runner, completed the big sprint double Friday and became the outstanding star of the European track and field championships.

The long-legged Polish girl added the 200 metres gold medal to her trophies, having previously won the 100 metres.

When it ordered its inquiry, the FCC said it had informed that many pro and amateur sports leagues and clubs, including the National Collegiate Athletic Association, require broadcasters to give them veto power over the selection of sports announcers.

It noted that many announcers are hired or paid by sports clubs, colleges and sponsors of sports broadcasts. In some cases, it said, the announcers are full-time, salaried officials or employees of the clubs or colleges.

Owner Faces Ouster

NEW YORK (AP) — George Steinbrenner, owner of New York Yankees who last week pleaded guilty to making illegal political contributions, agreed Friday to sever connections with his baseball team until the commissioner decides if he should be banished from the sport.

Steinbrenner is a Cleveland shipbuilder who pleaded guilty to a Watergate grand jury's charge that he made illegal corporate contributions to Richard Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign and to the campaigns of several Democratic congressmen.

The announcement that Steinbrenner, who holds a majority interest in the first-place Yankees, had agreed to withdraw from all activities with the club and to sever contact with all its employees was made by commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The commissioner said his period of withdrawal would last until he decided what to do about Steinbrenner, who was fined $15,000 for his guilty plea.

The Cleveland industrialist also faces other possible actions in connection with sports. He owns a small interest in Chicago Bulls of the National Basketball Association, and that league is taking a similar look at whether he should be allowed to continue to do so.

Gert Pumfrey Takes Seniors' Golf Crown

Gert Pumfrey toured the Royal Colwood course in 90 strokes Friday to capture top honors in the annual Vancouver Island Senior Ladies' Golf Association tournament.

Mrs. Pumfrey collected the Mrs. Blair Patterson Trophy as she finished with a two-stroke margin over Gorge Vale clubmate Ivy Blunt.

Doris Babcock of Glen Meadows won the handicap title, taking the Dolly Wilson Trophy as she posted a net 78, two strokes in front of Colwood's Joan Perks.

Elsie Saunders of Gorge, winner of the championship last year, earned the Ethel M. Todd Trophy for the best net score by a grandmother. Scoring a net 79, Mrs. Saunders finished with a three-shot lead over Carrie Shearing of the Victoria Golf Club.

Lee Budden, Winnie Finnie and Jane Fall won the team championship for Cowichan as they combined for a three-player total of 257.

The City of Destiny Just Went Pouff

TACOMA (AP) — Unlike most major Pacific coast boom towns of the 1880s, the City of Destiny didn't burn itself down or crumble in an earthquake.

It just sat here and quietly went bust.

As a result, delighted architects are discovering today, Tacoma is a vast storehouse of magnificent public buildings that no one ever had the money to tear down.

"There's a whole era of American architecture represented here that survives hardly anywhere else," said Barnet Schorr, a Seattle architect who is restoring Tacoma's classic old city hall.

A towering brick structure built in 1883, the old city hall is one of a number of empty civic buildings being hustled out of their mothballs by eager renovators.

The old city jail is going to be a restaurant. The police station will house offices. The city's oldest firehouse is already a successful tavern.

The old city hall, target of the most ambitious restoration plans, is well on its way to becoming a five-story shopping complex.

"In a way, I guess we're lucky not to have become more prosperous as a city," said Tacoma city manager Bill Donaldson. "If we had experienced an economic boom 20 years ago, we'd have lost all those buildings to 'progress.'

Ironically, the long-neglected historic buildings of Tacoma may now prove to be the key to restoring prosperity to the city's lagging downtown shopping district.

"Interest in these buildings has come at just the right time," the city manager said.

"Shopping habits are changing — people are more interested in browsing through a series of small shops than crowding into huge department stores."

Encouraged by city enthusiasm, developer Robert Nyquist has invested more than $1.35 million in repairs and remodelling of the old city hall.

The repairs were much needed. Condemned as unsafe when city offices were moved to a gleaming new steel-and-glass edifice 15 years ago, the old hall and its stately clock tower have been left to the ravages of weather and vandals.

For 10 years, the building hovered on the brink of abandonment as a public nuisance. Former Mayor A. L. Rasmussen delighted in threatening to tear it down at a moment's notice.

When it opens in late September, the graceful old Spanish-Renaissance hall will be honeycombed with more than 40 small shops, boutiques and galleries. There'll be a roof-garden restaurant and a tavern in the jail. A baker will make bread fresh daily in the former city treasurer's safe.

Another architect, Alan Liddle, recently bought and restored a three-storey brownstone hotel near the former city hall which had been the city's most celebrated bawdyhouse.

"They tell me the girls used to wave out the top-floor windows while the prisoners in the city jail," Liddle said.

"There's still the name 'Ruby' scratched with a diamond in one of the windows."

Liddle converted the 75-year-old building into office spaces and found it "very profitable indeed."

Other restoration projects have sprouted:

A pair of newspaper reporters bought a crumbling 1807 fire station at a city auction and spent nine months of spare time restoring it to mint condition.

Engine House 9" is now a flourishing tavern.

A Tacoma banker has purchased the former Tacoma police headquarters, a round-towered building in the shadow of the old city hall.

"Tacoma has always attempted to compete with Seattle," he said. "That's stupid. First of all, it can't. Secondly, it shouldn't. Tacoma is different from Seattle, and that's as it should be. It has its own unique assets, and it should exploit them."

Schorr's whimsical style meshes with the building's original unconventional mix of neo-classical and baroque architecture.

"It's a building with a sense of humor," Schorr said. "You can't help but smile at it. I don't know what the original architects had in mind, but they've made a very witty building."

Schorr feels a revived historical section of downtown Tacoma could someday rival Seattle's famed Pioneer Square — but he discourages such comparisons.

"Tacoma has always attempted to compete with Seattle," he said. "That's stupid. First of all, it can't. Secondly, it shouldn't. Tacoma is different from Seattle, and that's as it should be. It has its own unique assets, and it should exploit them."

Faced with a city order to repair the building or else, the Burlington Northern is considering a shopping plaza under the great dome.

Hirohito Waiting For Ford

TOKYO (UPI) — Emperor Hirohito is looking forward to President Ford's visit to Japan late this year, the first ever by a president in office, as a chance "for building still closer ties" between Japan and the U.S.

The 73-year-old monarch and his wife, Empress Nagako, 71, met with newsmen at their summer vacation villa in Nasu, about 96 miles northeast of Tokyo to chat about many subjects including the planned visit of Ford and his wife, Betty, in November-December.

They tell me the girls used

50-YEAR TRADITION FADES

CALGARY (CP) — Kim Dong, 82, is one of about 200 persons who will find themselves homeless later this year when part of the city's Chinatown goes under the bulldozer.

For Kim Dong, the land deal is one of two — made 50 years apart — that constitute landmarks in his life.

In 1915 Kim Dong, a third-generation grocer in a southern Chinatown family business in China, asked his parents if he could go to Canada.

His parents refused permission, but his grandmother overruled the decision and arranged for the sale of a plot of family land to raise the required $500.

It took him 14 years until 1939 before he could return to Canton with the money to redeem his family's land. He worked as a cook to accumulate the money to repay his grandmother.

He returned to Canada in 1940, and prospered during the Second World War by operating an airfield restaurant. At the end of the war he went east, until ill health forced him back west and finally into retirement.

He has lived for the last 12 years in a housekeeping room, his friends dead or returned long ago to China.

He doesn't know where he will go when the expropriation deal is completed, although his name is on the waiting list at a senior citizen's housing project.

Spies for Mountie Are All Over

CLIMAX, Sask. (CP) — Two years ago, a marijuana smuggler tried to slip through Dennis Schneider's territory.

It must have seemed an easy task to cut a wire fence on the Montana-Saskatchewan border and traverse this sparsely-populated area of 1,152 square miles where the RCMP corporal is the only policeman.

But the smuggler and his trunkful of marijuana didn't make it, thanks to an informant and effective surveillance system.

"I've asked all the people in the area, whenever they see a strange car, to phone me," said Cpl. Schneider in an interview.

That approach might not work elsewhere, but it does in the handful of small towns and in the scattered farmyards where arrival of the RCMP means a smiling "Hi, Dennis."

The textbook terms for most of his work would be community relations and preventive policing.

Here that means swapping fish stories over coffee in the New World Cafe, casually bringing up the subject of unpaid liquor fines during a friendly chat, chasing stray calves back to the main herd, and in off-duty hours helping out with community concrete-pouring projects, clearing rocks from a farmer's field or coaching the local hockey team.

"This isn't like a big place where we're really pressed," he said. "I work long hours but I take it easy when I work."

The 32-year-old corporal, a veteran of 13 years on the force, has been based in this community of 350 for three years, working out of a 13-by-13-foot office in the front of the brick house where he and his wife and three children live.

The nearest RCMP detachment is 31 miles to the north, at Shaunavon. Before relay transmitters were installed in between, "you went out at night and you hoped that if you needed help your wife could hear the radio."

The basement of the house has a cell for emergency use: "I used it once as an education for a young fellow who turned 16 and got into the beer. I held him there for half an hour until his parents came and picked him up."

Angler's Dream

Deep-sea fishing lures anglers from around the world to the Bimini islands, 50 miles off the Florida coast. The tiny, quiet islands form the western section of the Bahama group. The sport in the area became what it is today with the help of Ernest Hemingway.

STATUE OF DEVIL GOD FOUND NEAR ROME

CERVETERI, Italy (AP) — A statue of Tuchula, the devil god of the Etruscans, has been found near this town, 22 miles north of Rome. The god was known to beitorsians only through inscriptions and paintings.

Police, investigating rumors that clandestine diggers had found one of unusual value, called in archeologists. Their digging uncovered tombs believed to belong to a king and his family, who lived about 2,500 years ago.

Among statues guarding the tomb was one of Tuchula. His grotesque face was fashioned with a bulbous nose, long ears, a deeply furrowed forehead, gaping fleshy mouth and a goatee.

The Etruscans, a civilization which preceded the Romans in Italy, are known to have carved their tombs in the rocky hills of Greppo di Sant'Angelo, an area populated only by wild pigs now.

Soviets by the Millions 'Otpusk' at Sochi Resort

SOCHI, U.S.S.R. (WP) — The warm sea breezes brush the palm trees at the base of the glass and steel skyscraper hotels. Young people lounge at the edge of glistening blue-green waters while the streets behind are jammed with sunburned window shoppers and strollers dressed in colorful shirts and floppy straw hats.

Planes, trains and buses disgorge thousands of excited travellers every day. But the crowds, the heat, squalling children and the scramble for a place to sleep have no apparent effect on the vacationers' zealous determination to have fun.

This is summer in Sochi, the Soviet Union's biggest and most popular resort, and it is not very different from "the season" in its western counterparts: Atlantic City, Eastbourne in England, or even Nice.

August is the peak, but the climate here is always moderate. So in the course of a year, three million people come to Sochi for what the Soviets call their "otpusk" — literally "letting go." From all accounts, a resort vacation in the Soviet Union has the same basic purpose it does anywhere: To provide a change, some relaxation, new friends perhaps, and maybe even a little glamor.

For those who can afford it, or have the right combination of luck, credentials and connections — the stay, usually about a month, is in a "first class" hotel or a plush sanatorium. Others find places in modest pension-style hotels or camping grounds.

In all, however, there are only 80,000 official rooms in Sochi and right now, officials estimate, there are 400,000 people. That means most vacationers have to find a room in someone else's apartment — a bit of Soviet-sanctioned capitalism.

In these transactions, glamor is the first casualty. Given the best of circumstances, Soviet apartments and houses are small. To meet local health standards, each person is supposed to have a minimum of 15 square feet of space. That becomes impossible when, as so often happens, three, four or five families cram into two or three rooms.

The price set by the authorities is low, a ruble a night (about $1.40) per person, although the cost tends to go higher if the deal is made directly.

The central registry falls far behind in the summer months and many people have to settle for whatever they arrive. Some families have longstanding arrangements.

The big hotels — there were 21 at last count — are cheap by Western standards, $3 per person per night for a standard double room with bath, and then fill up fast. Luxury is unheard of (fans are rare and air conditioners almost nonexistent), but the simple rooms are adequate and certainly no worse than those in the "Grand Hotel" in Eastbourne, for example, which costs at least ten times as much.

The hotels closest to the water look like sandwich egg whites, neat but devoid of individuality. The Hotel Pearl, the largest, has 1,100 rooms. It also sports a nightclub, and a private cabana area where guests, many of whom are foreigners paying inflated prices, spend their days on wooden slabs, tip-toeing occasionally into the water. Sochi, in common with Nice, has pebble beaches instead of sand.

The downtown of the city is a handsome area of shaded streets and parks. Outdoor cafes, ice cream kiosks, an amusement park, shooting galleries and do-it-yourself machines are available. At night, vacationers can choose from a dozen or more restaurants with orchestras, movies, concerts or theatres.

The beaches, in spite of the discomfort of having to walk on hot stones, are packed solid from early morning. Soviet women have always favored two-piece bathing suits, and now bikinis are coming into fashion. Men also wear scanty briefs. Given the substantial size of many Soviets, there is an abundance of pulchritude on display.

Changing takes place in small wooden huts that look like Victorian bathing machines, since walking on the streets in swimsuits is frowned upon.

The mid-summer sun is hot, but bearable with temperatures in the high 80s. Sochi, which is on the Black Sea, about 1,200 miles southwest of Moscow, has long, lovely springs and falls and a short winter with almost never any snow. It was the lush climate and the discovery of hydro-sulphur waters that led to the early development of the town as a resort in pre-revolutionary Russia.

A 1913 guidebook for the region said that a "speculation fever with unfavorable consequences was underway." After the war, Lenin signed a decree putting the town at the disposal of the workers and construction of the sanatoriums and hotels began in earnest. By the early 1960s, Sochi had expanded, so far beyond its original limits that the government formally enlarged it to include a length of about 80 miles along the coastline.

U.S.-CUBA TALK TO END CHILL

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Envys of the U.S. and Cuba have met secretly in Switzerland to discuss possibilities for ending the U.S.-Cuban cold war, diplomatic sources disclosed Thursday.

According to these sources, Washington and Havana used one of the oldest of diplomatic covers — a routine Cuban delegation visit to Switzerland, a favorite neutral ground for delicate diplomatic capers — to sound each other out on the subject of restoring relations.

They said Cuba's foreign minister, Raul Roa, conferred with unidentified U.S. diplomats between Aug. 27 and Sept. 3 in Berne, the Swiss capital and site of a sizeable U.S. embassy.

Switzerland has represented U.S. interests in Cuba since Washington broke relations with Havana on Jan. 3, 1961.

Roa was heading a Cuban delegation which is now in Hungary. The sources said they did not know whether further U.S.-Cuban contacts had been arranged.

In Washington, officials had any knowledge of the Berne meetings described by the diplomatic sources.

Meantime, the Organization of American States took a first formal step Thursday toward ending its own 10-year-old Cuban quarantine.

The OAS council, headquartered in Washington, agreed to consider dismantling the economic and diplomatic embargo the OAS put into force against Cuba in 1964.

At the request of Venezuela, Costa Rica and Colombia, the OAS council announced it would begin discussing this issue Monday and would hold at least one follow-up meeting on Sept. 19.

The sources said they did not know whether

TRIAL DELAYED

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Maharem Kurbegovic, the Yugoslavian immigrant accused of being the "Alphabet Bomber," Friday won a month delay in his preliminary hearing on charges of causing the explosion that killed three persons at international airport last month.

Judge Antonio Chavaz continued the preliminary hearing until Oct. 8 when the court was informed that the public defender assigned to Kurbegovic had been replaced by attorney Daye Shinn.

District attorney Joseph Busch, meanwhile, said that "due to the complex nature of the case," it would be presented to the county grand jury on Sept. 18. Busch, noting that he was barred from discussing the case by a court gag order, would not elaborate.

make it all the way to the finish line at 13,677 feet, according to a doctor's request to stop halfway up.

ALAGNA SESIA, Italy — Eighty men and women ranging in age from 51 to 78 have climbed a 13,677-foot peak on Europe's second tallest mountain to prove age is no barrier to physical fitness.

The group completed the climb on 15,203-foot Mount Rosa Thursday and tramped down to this Alpine village on Friday, happy and sprightly, said doctors who accompanied them.

Jack and Donella Frost claimed in the superior court suit that one of the riders fell from his mount, and the horse landed on their table.

SUDBURY, Ont. — David Lewis said Friday night that he does not regret toppling the federal Liberals and precipitating the July 8 general election that brought a majority government and weakened his New Democratic Party in the Commons.

NEW YORK — The Jesuit order has dismissed a Roman Catholic priest who baptized the son of an advocate of free choice on the question of abortion.

The dismissal of Rev. Joseph O'Rourke removed him from the Jesuit order, but not from the priesthood.

STRATFORD, Ont. — Michael Bawtree has resigned as associate director of the Stratford Festival. He came to Stratford in 1964 as the festival's first dramaturge, responsible for assessing material for the next season, reading scripts and giving literary advice. From 1965 to 1970, he worked in theatre in Vancouver and Ottawa, returning to Stratford in January, 1971.

HOLLYWOOD — Character actor Otto Kruger, whose style typified the "mature professional man" in a stage, screen and television career that spanned nearly six decades, died Friday on his 89th birthday. The sandy-haired, grey-eyed actor succumbed at the motion picture and television hospital in Woodland Hills.

NEW DELHI — The King of Sikkim said today he will not abdicate his throne despite New Delhi's move to reduce his tiny mountaintop Himalayan kingdom to an associate state of India.

"I have no intention of abdicating," Chogyal Pythongpal Nyamgyal said. "As long as I have a contribution to make to my people I will continue functioning."

OTTAWA — The Supreme Court granted permission Friday for an anti-abortion group to present arguments in the appeal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler of Montreal, convicted in April on a charge of performing an illegal abortion. Chief justice Bora Laskin ruled that Alliance for Life will be allowed to present its views to the Supreme Court when it hears Morgentaler's appeal in October.

Chicago Seven Terms Upheld

CHICAGO. (AP) — A U.S. federal appeals court upheld Friday contempt convictions of a lawyer and three of the Chicago Seven defendants in the controversial trial resulting from street disturbances during the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

The defendants, David Delling, Abbott (Abbie) Hoffman, and Jerry Rubin, plus lawyer William Kunstler, were convicted of the contempt charges.

All defendants and the two lawyers were cited for contempt in February, 1970, by Judge Julius Hoffman of U.S. District Court who presided at the stormy 4½-month trial.

Delling, Hoffman, Rubin and Rennie Davis and Tom Hayden were convicted at the conclusion of the trial of crossing state lines to incite rioting at the time of the conviction. They were acquitted of conspiring to do so. Two other defendants, John Froines and Lee Weiner, were acquitted of all charges.

Later, an appeals court reversed the trial convictions and the government declined to retry the case.

During the rancorous trial, bitter arguments occurred between defense lawyers, the judge and the prosecutors.

An inspection of the apple showed the burglar had no front teeth. A few hours later a policeman spotted Redfern — a big gap where his front teeth should have been.

He pleaded guilty Friday to stealing $177.30 in cash and fruit. The judge deferred sentence for six months to give him time to find a job.

A quiet family wedding was solemnized on Aug. 29, 1974, in Metropolitan United Church, when Elaine Katherine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Smith, 790 Dominion Road, exchanged vows with Thomas Jeffrey Rush, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Rush, 452 Gorle Road, Reverend E. Kim officiated.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sammons, 408 Charter Avenue, Victoria, announced with pleasure the marriage of their fifth child, Diane Margaret, to Mr. Joseph Douglas McKenzie of New Westminster, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Douglas McKenzie.

The civil service was officiated by Mr. Noel Andrews at 11:30 a.m. on Friday, Aug. 30, 1974, at the Victoria Hotel, Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Luff, chairman of the reception, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McMahon of Victoria.

The wedding took place on Aug. 29, 1974, at the Victoria Hotel, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Greenhalgh officiating. Sandi Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Arthur James Anderson, Ronald's son, and Lorine Marie Joyce, sister of the bride, were maid of honor. The bride's best man was Randy Lazurko of Yorkton, Saskatchewan.

The reception was held in the Canadian Room at the Victoria Hotel, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Radau, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast. The happy couple will reside in Victoria, B.C., after a short honeymoon.

McMahon plan to be in Victoria for the coming year.

DEODORANT SOAP TOO EFFICIENT?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Deodorant soaps may do more harm than good by destroying too many germs, according to a two-year study by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

The report, still in draft form but due to be published for public comment within the next two weeks, calls into question a whole series of germ killers found in soaps, first aid creams and other anti-microbial products.

The result could be that many soaps will have to prove they are safe and some may have to change their formulas.

Some germs on the skin serve a "protective function" and if too many are wiped out in the name of smelling good, worse ones may take their place, the study panel concluded.

"It is possible that contrary to what might be expected from an anti-microbial product, that certain bacterial infections due to gram negative and streptococcal organisms might be increased rather than decreased," the report said.

If this were true the deodorant benefit would probably be considered outweighed by the potential hazard.

In addition because these chemicals are absorbed into the blood stream, the panel is concerned about the prudence of exposing the entire body surface to these chemicals when alternative methods of odor control are available.

The report is part of the FDA's review of all over-the-counter drugs. During the course of the study, as evidence came to light, soap makers dropped suspect ingredients such as hexachlorophene and trichloran.

The study recommends that even the minute amount of hexachlorophene now allowed for preservative reasons be banned and that trichloran also be outlawed.

Hexachlorophene has been linked to brain damage while the other substance can cause a person's skin to become so sensitive to light that he would be turned into what one FDA official called a "human vampire" — able to roam outside only at night.

To Pursue Ideal

OTTAWA (CP) — Helvi Linne Sipila is so committed to full equality for women in the world that she has left her family in Finland while she pursues her ideal through the United Nations in New York.

"It wasn't an easy decision for me to make," she said in an interview Thursday, explaining why she left home two years ago to accept an appointment as UN assistant secretary-general for social and humanitarian affairs.

An eminent family lawyer in her own country and former president of the International Federation of Women Lawyers, Ms. Sipila, now 59, is here for a UN conference on women's rights which has attracted delegates from more than 30 countries.

When Kurt Waldheim became UN secretary-general in 1972 and decided he wanted a woman in his executive, Ms. Sipila was recommended by her own government "almost before I knew about it."

She feels equality in the fullest sense of the word will be a global reality for women before the end of the 20th century, largely because of work being done in many countries by the UN and other agencies.

The conference, a scene-setter for 1975 — decreed by the UN as International Women's Year, is designed to examine how national and regional machinery may be created to bring about full equality for women. It began Wednesday and continues in closed workshops through Sept. 17.

For Ms. Sipila — who prefers the undefinable prefix because it was encouraged by her father when she was in her teens — the conference is clear evidence of the progress made by women in their seemingly endless fight for full equality.

Ironically, she said she has had to overcome the personal obstacle of never having had her equality challenged.

Her childhood was spent largely with male cousins, competing with them at their level.

Ms. Sipila opened her own law office in Helsinki in 1943, the only practice run by a woman in a country that has been relatively progressive as

DR. SPOCK SAYS:

Raising Children Is Not Easy

By BENJAMIN SPOCK
(First of a series in ten parts)

Wherever I go on speaking trips (most commonly to universities), and in the publications I read, I am made aware of the mounting criticism of marriage and the family in North America.

We have one of the highest divorce rates in the world. But perhaps more serious is the amount of tension and hostility in many of the families in which the parents are still living together. Our high levels of delinquency, crime, alcoholism, drug abuse, mental illness and suicide partly reflect the unsatisfactory state of our family life.

Numerous critics, particularly the young people and the anthropologists and sociologists, put much of the blame on the isolation of today's nuclear family (consisting only of father, mother and children).

Tensions Diluted

In previous generations grandparents, aunts, uncles and cousins lived near and participated in the care of the young. They constituted the so-called extended family, which provided mutual support and love for the various members and diluted the tensions between parents and children.

The solidarity of the extended family has been broken mainly by the unprecedented mobility of today's living, the fact that young couples are ready to go anywhere in the nation — or the world — to follow the careers of their choice. And the same mobility — because of changing job assignments, changing homes or changing employment — keeps many young couples from growing roots in any neighborhood. This isolation from the community further concentrates dependence — and antagonisms — within the nuclear family.

I think there are other potent generators of family tensions. The authority of religion, which used to give people a strong sense of direction and duty, has been progressively weakened. There has been unparalleled prosperity in the 30 years since the end of World War II; and unusual prosperity is, I believe, always somewhat demoralizing to human societies. It substitutes a preoccupation with money and things for a reliance on loving relationships and other spiritual gratifications. More specifically, it accentuates the greedy and rivalrous aspects of human nature.

Children sense deeply how important it is to them to have both a father and a mother, and to have them get along with each other. Any talk of divorce fills them with alarm and protest. If their parents separate, they beg them to get together again. This early awareness later becomes, when the children have grown to be parents, an element in their sense of responsibility for providing domestic security for their children.

Vows Glamorized

Children, especially in the 3-to-6-year-old period, mature emotionally and intellectually by overidealizing their parents and by aspiring to grow up to be like them. They glamorize their parents' marriage, exaggerating its virtues and minimizing its defects.

The boy at this age particularly admires his father and patterns himself after him. His mother becomes his romantic ideal. At the age of 4 he'll say with great sincerity that he's going to marry her. The girl tries to become just like her mother and falls in love with her father. Each child yearns secretly to have a baby in partnership with the parent he loves romantically.

Most young people by the time they are adults want to marry not primarily because

They need security, training were a gift from life or God, and then were disappointed with what they got. But all people who have had a good marriage know that they and their spouses had to work hard to make it good—and still have to.

Though some individual, afraid of the blighting effect of marriage, may prefer a succession of love affairs throughout life, a majority of us who are married would only have to visualize the rest of our lives without marriage (or the prospect of marriage) to realize that we would feel quite at loose ends and for-

A minority can go comfortably through life without children and grandchildren. But a majority of us, if we stop to picture life without offspring to need us when they are young or for us to turn for renewal of family ties when we are older, would unhesitatingly choose to take a chance on all the trials of family life.

Emotional Neglect

I predict, in fact, that in a considerably majority of the cases in which a man and woman have no ongoing commitment to each other or to their children and who are giving each other no continuing emotional support, the children will suffer from emotional neglect and will have impaired personalities the rest of their lives.

In my view, one of the promising trends is that more young people in their 20s who are serious enough about each other to want to live together but are not sure enough to be ready to marry, feel free to live together openly. This gives them a better opportunity to find out whether they are really compatible and lessens the possibility that physical sexual attraction is the main thing that is drawing them together.

I'm not speaking here of teen-agers who are not yet in any position to marry, nor of casual or promiscuous relationships. I'm not suggesting, either, that all young people should live together before marriage. Most parents are not yet ready for any such unconventional arrangement.

Probably a majority of young people will continue to want to make up their minds about marriage without openly living together first.

In the future the young people who are afraid of marriage, or who never seem to find just the right person, are not going to feel the pressure from relatives and from society to marry anyway, for convention's sake, as they have in previous generations, and I think that's all to the good.

ADULTS GO BACK

About 1,800 adults will head back to the classroom for non-degree courses ranging from beginners' Hebrew to microclimatology for gardeners during University of Victoria's continuing education program which begins Sept. 23.

Dr. Larry Devlin, program director, said enrolment is expected to jump by 500 this year for adults taking 80 courses given mainly during the evenings on campus.

About half the UVic faculty is involved teaching courses

With Dorothy Fraser

nice ringing phrase, don't you think? . . . And we accord full honor to those who help uphold it . . . including one of our own nieces who's a brand new lawyer! . . . Talking to her the other day about what she'll need in the way of legal garments when she begins her articling next week, and later on when she's admitted to the Bar . . . it occurred to us that there must be a number of brand new lawyers . . . male and female . . . being admitted to the Bar this year . . . and they're all going to need legal clothing . . . Well, if you happen to be one of these . . . no longer any need to go shopping in Vancouver or send away for things . . . because Wilson's are now the Vancouver Island representatives for Harcourts of Toronto, foremost makers of legal clothing in Canada . . . As of now Wilson's have a full stock of accessories like shirts, collars, legal tabs, shirt studs and carrying cases . . . And samples of Barristers', Queen's Counsel and Judges' gowns and waistcoats for you to choose from . . . Take your measurements and order the specific items you need . . . Actually, one gown . . . along with the long-sleeved waistcoat and proper accessories, is all you'll need for years to come unless they promote you to judge or something . . . And with these superbly tailored gowns, you'll look every inch the fine lawyer you are or intend to become! W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Fifteen per cent of the women in France are overweight according to recent statistics.

Dresses to go a-cruising in . . .

No Virginia, cruise clothes have not started to arrive in the stores yet . . . but for many of you lucky ladies who are taking off on cruises . . . planning holidays in Mexico or Hawaii or wherever the sun shines brightly after it bids a fond farewell to Victoria . . . here's a chance to acquire a classy holiday wardrobe at about half of what it would cost you later on . . . You see, Eaton's Import Room are putting all their summer dresses on sale, starting this Monday . . . Instead of doing like most people and stashing their summer things away to be brought out later and sold at full price . . . they're slashing price tags in half on imported clothes so fresh and new in fashion only the most fashion-conscious of Victoria women have even seen them yet! . . . We got a pre-view this week of some of the lovely French dresses by a famous designer on the Cote d'Azur . . . a pant suit with linens slacks and acrylic V-neck cardigan . . . a 3-pce. dress with cotton skirt, shirt top and little knitted pullover with spaghetti straps, in a navy, red and green geometric design . . . Noticed it was tagged at $245 . . . but this, of course, is now cut in half . . . there are linen skirts . . . elegant, understated dresses . . . just about everything you'll need to make your trip an outstanding success clothes-wise . . . Eaton's Import Room, 383-7141, loc. 242.

Valentino uses plumes and feathers in his winter collection.

Full-cut, classic topecoats by Louis Manley . . .

If this is your year for a new topecoat . . . you certainly should make Wilson's your first port of call . . . because they have a terrific selection of beautiful coats to suit every coat wardrobe need . . . Last week they got their complete shipment from Louis Manley . . . we tell you this at the outset because it means there'll be no repeats and no special ordering . . . so if you like one, now is the time! . . . There are some beautiful tweeds in colors to blend with everything you own . . . Styles are either single-breasted with raglan sleeves, or double-breasted with the sleeves set in . . . None are belted . . . a feature we guarantee will appeal to many of you who dislike belts for one reason or another . . . There's a classic camel hair coat, cut on straight lines and buttoning up to neck . . . Round Peter Pan collar and raglan sleeves . . . Another full-cut coat is wool and mohair in a large grey, white and black check, or camel black and white . . . All these full-cut Louis Manley coats are particularly good on the larger figure . . . and prices are far from expensive . . . The camel hairs cost $150 . . . tweeds are from $160 to $180 . . . W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 382-2821.

A lot of man-tailored suits in Saint Laurent's fall collection Shoes with the soft touch . . .

"Soft as a sneaker, strong as a shoe" . . . that's how Bandolino of Italy describe one of their newest fall shoes the "Sleaker" . . . a squishy, young, two-eyelet tie with wrapped crepe sole which we saw at Munday's this week . . . Dark brown, gold or navy unlined suede, it costs but $23 and is a dandy little walking shoe . . . This applies, of course to all the new Bandolinos now at Munday's . . . There's "Marino" in gold or dark brown suede . . . soft and flexible as all get-out . . . wrapped crepe sole with semi-wedge heel . . . "Sergio" is another young shoe . . . a tie with heavy crepe sole and heel in camel or whisky calf, priced at $27 . . . A somewhat dressier shoe is named "Provo" . . . It has a suede and calf vamp, open toe and heel, and unit polysole construction which means sole and heel are all in one . . . Padded insole for extra comfort . . . Mid-brown or black, at $24 . . . Finally there's a new sandal called "Onda" . . . crepe sole and heel, open toe and back in red, navy, camel or brown calf . . . Just $22 at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Wear your checked or tweed pantsuit with a paisley shirt.

Floral gifts with a plus . . .

The ceramic elves in Island Florist's window drew us like a magnet when we were hurrying up Fort St. the other day . . . so we had to go in and see them close up . . . They're the cutest things, made locally, with great imagination and a sly sense of humor . . . Different sizes to set on your patio or nestle among the flowers . . . There are adorable ceramic frogs too which, filled with a few flowers, would make a charming gift . . . (Someone who received one of these as a gift tells us she now uses her frog on the kitchen sink to hold soap pads!) . . . Really, Island Florist has no end of delightful gifts items . . . practically any one of which can be filled with flowers to make a double-barrelled gift offering! One such example is the heavy glass beer mug with silver rim, perfect gift for a man in hospital . . . And for mothers with new babies, Island Florist will arrange flowers in the most adorable musical ceramic cradles, trains, cottages or carousels . . . Most of these gift items, by the way, have the Island Florist name on the bottom because they're made especially for Island! Other pretties which intrigued us are the miniature old-fashioned wash basins and jugs . . . perfect for putting little plants in . . . And do get yourself one of the special plant sprayers to keep your house plants looking healthy! Island Florist Ltd., 745 Fort St., 383-3113.

Wear high-heeled shoes with your dressy skirts.

Pantsuits for fall and winter . . .

Regardless of what you might have been reading in the slick fashion magazines on the subject of skirts versus pants . . . we can tell you positively that pantsuits are still very much with us and probably will remain so as long as women have breath and voice to proclaim their comfort and practicality . . . and men have eyes to appreciate their good looks! . . . A well-tailored, smartly styled and becomingly tailored pantsuit is a pearl of great price . . . and you'll find a good supply of these "pearls" at Charmante's . . . We were much taken with the Ultra-Suede pantsuits we saw there last week . . . Two styles, one with a collared V-neck and fagoting trim on the pockets, the other buttoning up to the neck, cinched at the waist with a tie belt . . . And for double knits you'll find pantsuits in all-wool or polyesters . . . a colorful selection with price tags ranging from $65 up . . . Charmante's also has a lot of new skirts by Munrosprings . . . check tweeds in pretty colors, tie neck, small collars and classic styles . . . And do have a look at the blouses . . . There's an unusually good selection of Ports Dressy blouses in gold and silver and slinky nylon jersey with ruffled necks . . . great toppers for long skirts . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 383-1543.

Why not take up hairstyling?

Maybe you've finished regular school and have been just taking it easy all summer . . . not too sure about what you'd like to do with the months or years ahead . . . Well, have you thought about becoming a hairdresser? . . . When we suggest this we mean not merely someone who can set hair adequately but a really TOP hair stylist thoroughly trained in every aspect of the beauty business, who can command top wages and work just about anywhere he or she chooses . . . It's a career worth working at if you've any artistic bent at all . . . and you'll get the expert training you need at Glamour School of Hairdressing . . . B.C.'s most prestigious hairdressing school . . . Besides Danny Hall, the man who is the president in Europe participating in the World Championships (he's the trainer of the Canadian Team), Mr. Nels Todd, formerly of Edmonton and one of the world's leading hair stylists, is the instructor . . . So you can appreciate the calibre of those who'll teach you . . . As for the school itself . . . it's now located on Fort St. near Cook, and is a really nice place to work in! . . . New classes start this coming Monday, on October 15 and November 9 . . . so why not give your hair a new look . . . When Danny gets back in October he'll be teaching you all the latest European styles . . . A great PLUS we'd say . . . Phone Glamour School of Hairdressing, 1119 Fort St., 386-3821 or 386-7843.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

I often think how wonderful it would be, if more often, my doctor brethren showed that they were sorry when they had to hurt a patient, either physically or by giving some bad news.

I have doubtless told here before of the technically very able young surgeon who came into San Francisco when I was there. He had been trained so well in New York, Philadelphia and Boston that it was a joy to watch him operate. My partner and I who had more patients than we could take care of, often referred one to this man whose surgical skill we admired. But most of them came back, asking us to find them another surgeon.

When we asked what went wrong they usually said, "I got into a fight with him," or "He was so unpleasant with me; please get me someone else who is friendly, and so on."

The best lesson in medical practice came to me from a girl of 18 or so when she was bedridden in my ward at the county hospital. She had a very painful ulcerated tubercular hip, with a big ulcer which I had to clean every day.

I sympathized with her for the miserable trick that Nature had played on her — a trick that had made it impossible for her ever to have a beau or a husband — and with her idealism, for she had never had a woman lover. I told her how much I admired her because she swore to me "before God" that she never had allowed herself to show any special affection for the girls in the school where she taught, much as she often wanted to. After we had talked for awhile, she went away happy.

I am glad that I learned from my doctor-father that it is important to be friendly with patients and to show that I like them. It has made life much happier for me.

MAKESHIFT HEATING

Many people, during the fuel crisis, are looking in their basements or attics for spare heating devices, such as electric, oil, and kerosene space heaters that they have perhaps not used for years. Recently the U.S. National Safety Council warned people of the hazards of using old, poorly-working heaters that have frayed wires and that will not shut off automatically if they should tip over accidentally.

Another dangerous practice is using charcoal-burning barbecue grills inside the house; the charcoal releases deadly carbon monoxide gas, which in an unventilated area can kill an entire family. All heating devices that burn wood or coal must have a vent running to the outside, especially from bedrooms. A terrible feature about carbon monoxide gas is that it can kill people without warning.

EYE CANCER

A year ago, Dr. A. B. Reese of the great Harkness Eye Institute at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center of New York City received a big prize for discovering a method for destroying the hereditary, highly malignant tumors of the retina (see page of this issue) in young children, called retinoblastoma.

TATTOOS (April 20-May 21)

Study Aries message: What you may feel should be secure is actually elusive. Know it and don't bank too heavily on preconceived notions. Highlight freedom of choice, versatility. Dealings indicated with Gemini, Libra and Sagittarius.

TAUROS (May 21-June 20)

Marriage, partnership, unique alliance could be subject to pressure. Examine facts and discard rumors. Another Gemini — and a Virgo — appear to be involved. Cycle is such that you land on your feet. Know it and be confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

Light touch should prevail. Means eschew heavy-handed methods. There are secrets which evade you. You don't have complete grasp of situation. Realize this and tread lightly. If this you do, you save time, embarrassment and money.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

Accent is on how you handle "fulfilled wishes." Means you may have asked for more than you can handle. Key now is to be selective, to take one thing at a time, to know difference between reality and desire. Pisces, Virgo could be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

Now you see what can be — and you are ready to do something about it. One who opposes you may play meaningful compliment. Means way could be cleared in way that surprises you. Finish rather than begin project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

New approach to problem affecting partnership-money situation is indicated. Means you get cards face up in connection with who owns what and what is to be done about it. Leo, Aquarius may be in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

You are not seeing too clearly. Means illusion could cloud actuality. Intuition and hunch play prominent roles. Key now is to be cautious, especially where long-range alliances, contracts enter picture. Check with Aquarian who knows the law!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20)

Those you are accustomed to may have surprises in store. It now is more necessary than usual to be flexible. Plans are subject to change. You have not been told a complete story. Look behind the scenes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

You may feel that expression is blocked. And you may be right — but the condition is temporary. Change for the better is upcoming. It will be necessary to do some tearing down — for the purpose of rebuilding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

Accent is on how you handle "fulfilled wishes." Means you may have asked for more than you can handle. Key now is to be selective, to take one thing at a time, to know difference between reality and desire. Pisces, Virgo could be involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

You feel need to meditate. Follow inner desires. Get in touch with yourself. Being alone is not being lonely. Know it and appreciate yourself. Then others will respect you, too. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

Obtain valid hint from Scorpio message. Improve relations with those who hold opposing views. Build bridge of goodwill. Let others have their say. High-light flexibility. Humor is great asset. Don't force issues.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20)

Obtain valid hint from Scorpio message. Improve relations with those who hold opposing views. Build bridge of goodwill. Let others have their say. High-light flexibility. Humor is great asset. Don't force issues.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

Finances command attention. Review budget, investment plans. You may be putting too many eggs in one basket. Diversify. Gemini, Virgo individuals figure prominently. Change of scenery is on agenda. Be analytical.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

You can expand. What you own may be worth more than is apparent on surface. You are due for surprise — of pleasant variety. Taurus, Libra persons are in picture. Highlight diplomacy. Someone wants to pay you a meaningful compliment.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY

You have innate ability to aid others, especially where health is concerned. You have knack for appealing to people, for communicating and gaining plaudits. May was an important month — the year has featured social contacts, travel, a widening of interests. Aries, Libra persons play key roles in your life.

dear abby

The Dirty Dog!

DEAR ABBY: What would you say if I told you that a supposedly sane 50-year-old man refuses to take a bath without your column? If for some reason our newspaper ever quit printing it, I am sure he would rot.

As if this isn't bad enough, he is truly convinced that sometimes his wife tries to destroy the paper before he gets an opportunity to "bathe" with Abby.

Is he crazy, or just eccentric? —Appalled Daughter.

DEAR DAUGHTER: Neither. He's adorable. Please ask him not to splash. I hate to get my hair wet!

DEAR ABBY: I love my husband and wife should be on the same team, but how do you get a husband on your team when he always wants to be the "hero"? — Can't Win For Losin'

DEAR CAN'T: Tell the "hero" (and not in front of the kids) that children NEED to know what they may and may not do, and parents who allow themselves to be manipulated are doing their children an injustice. Mom and Dad should make those decisions together and stick with them. Always be fair and just. But firm. That's parental love in action.

DEAR ABBY: I am living at home and my boyfriend, who lives out of state, is on a very limited income, so he has been writing airmail postcards instead of letters. He writes every day.

My mother has been reading his postcards. I am sure of it because she seems to know everything he has written on them. He sometimes gets a little mushy and also writes some short poems which I consider beautiful.

I told my mother that I would appreciate it if she would NOT read my postcards, and she said anything written on a postcard could be expected to be read by the mailman and anyone else who handled it.

Abby, I feel that if a person has real character he will not read even a postcard. What do you think? — Oklahoma.

DEAR OKIE: I think it's foolish to expect that which has been written on a postcard to remain confidential. Suggestion: Give your boyfriend his Christmas present early, and send him some air-mail postage stamps.

DEAR ABBY: Neither my husband nor I drink or smoke, and whenever we have a family gathering there is always some member of the family who brings a bottle of wine. In order not to hurt their feelings, we always open the bottle, but we never partake of it.

My husband and I do not like drinking in our home, so how do we tactfully let the idea across? These relatives read your column, so if this is printed, maybe they'll take the hint. —Two Teetotalers.

DEAR TWO: Don't count on it. Tell those who are apt to bring a bottle that

MRS. METTHAM

At Age 76 Life Is a Melody

"The Lord played a dirty trick on me . . ." is about the first thing Clarissa Mettham tells you when you meet her. Then she adds "and I've told Him so many, many times."

The trick, as she sees it, is to have given her the gift of music, and especially a deep and abiding love for the piano; and then making it impossible for her to learn to play that instrument "properly" until she was in her 70s.

This year, under the tutelage of Mrs. Kathleen Jennings, a Victoria music teacher, Mrs. Mettham, now 76, passed the Toronto Conservatory Grade Nine examinations for pianoforte — before an examiner with a reputation (according to Mrs. Jennings) of being "very, very strict."

It was a distinct triumph for this determined woman, who didn't start to take lessons until she was 72.

The Mettham love of music and for the piano goes back to her first years.

Born in Yorkshire, one of eight children, in what she terms "a working class family" (and with a grandmother who had been an opera singer and a father who played brass wind instruments in the Royal Navy for years), the little Clarissa would hum and sing "bits and pieces" from the "good music" her father played or that she heard on the old-fashioned gramophone "with a horn" that was in her home.

"Sometimes when I was a child I'd go off by myself on long walks and I'd compose music just by humming and using the do, re, mi of the tonic solfa," she remembers. "I had all sorts of little tunes stored in my head."

When she was 12 the family did get a piano. Then "there was no spare cash for lessons."

However a book of instructions came with the instrument "and from it I managed to learn some of the notes and to pick out the little tunes I had composed."

From then on that piano filled all the young Clarissa's waking hours.

"I was always begging my mother to let me practise . . . even in winter and by candlelight with the room as cold as 'charity.'

Years went by. Marriage, children, keeping a home together, divorce in her middle years and need, then, to make her own living, all pushed this woman further and further away from her dream of wanting to play the piano properly.

She left England. Worked as a cashier in Australia and New Zealand for 10 years. Came to London, Ontario, where some of her family had settled and held a position as cashier in the general hospital there for another 10 years:

It was in the Ontario city at the age of 72 that she took her first formal piano lessons from Miss Laura Kirkwood, whose only stipulation, when she accepted her, was that she must want to play the piano.

Soon Miss Kirkwood was urging her to work toward the Toronto Conservatory Grade Nine examinations.

Here again Fate (or was it the Lord) stepped in and shortly before the exams, Clarissa Mettham fell and damaged a hand.

"I couldn't touch the piano for over a year after that . . . so there was no examination."

Frustrated and disappointed, she set out to travel across Canada and ended up in Victoria.

"Where I spent days sitting on the rock wall at Craigdarroch Castle listening to the music school pupils playing and practising."

It was then she decided it was here she wished to live out her days. She went back to Ontario, sold her home there, came back and bought one "with a garden" at the "other end" of Vancouver Street.

Then, on November 13, 1973, it was she here wished to live out her days. She went back to Ontario, sold her home there, came back and bought one "with a garden" at the "other end" of Vancouver Street.

PROBLEM
By
E. VISSERMAN, Holland

BLACK: 12

WHITE: 11

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

OPENING TRAP

WHITE: Pal Benko

1. P-K4 P-K4
2. N-KB3 N-QB3
3. B-N5 N1-K2
4. P-B3 P-QR3
5. B-B4 P-KR3
6. P-Q4 P-Q3
7. Q-N3 N-QR4
8. BxPch K-Q2 (a)
9. NxPch PxN
10. Q-K6 mate

(a) Hoping for 9.Q-K6ch, K-B3; and the White Queen would be trapped, but White's next move dispells any hope.

The U.S. Open

The U.S. Open Chess Championship was held in New York city during the month of August — and it was hot over the board as it was outside. And that was hot! Of the 549 players who started, 440 finished, among them the six participating Grandmasters, Vlastimil Hort of Czechoslovakia, Jan Timman of Holland, Sammy Reshevsky, Rev. William Lombardy, Pal Benko and Arthur Bisguier of the U.S.

In the second round, former U.S. champion John Grefe, a disciple of the guru Maharajah Ji, lost to Alan Pines and immediately quit. There were other surprises in the early stages. In the third round, Kenneth Regan, a New Jerseyite of only 14 years, put the first dent in the Grandmasters' ranks by drawing with Rev. Lombardy. Take a look at the first few moves.

WHITE: Lombardy

1. P-Q4 P-Qn3
2. P-K4 B-N2
3. B-Q3 P-KB4
4. PxP BxP
5. Q-Q5ch P-N3
BLACK: Regan

6. PxP B-KN2!
7. PxPch K-B1
8. PxN equals KxQ
9. Q-N4 BxR
10. N-QB3 Q-KR1

Rio Algom Project Threat

TORONTO (CP) — Rio Algom Mines Ltd. of Toronto has concluded an agreement to sell 37 million pounds of uranium oxide to two United States electric utilities for at least $740 million.

However, the agreement already may be aborted by a federal government announcement. Thursday regulating the sale of uranium to foreign buyers to ensure domestic markets are protected!

Under the terms announced by Rio Algom, Duke Power Co. of Charlotte, N.C., would take 20 million pounds of uranium oxide at a rate of two million pounds a year from 1981 to 1990. The Tennessee Valley Authority of Chattanooga, Tenn., would receive 6,506,614 kilograms of uranium hexafluoride (equivalent to 17 million pounds of uranium oxide) between 1979 and 1990.

Fiji Covers Up
SUVA (AP) — The Fiji government banned Friday the export of native weapons and carvings from the Pacific island in bid to stop tourists stripping it clean of artwork. The Fiji museum said some of the best collections of Fijian art already are in British museums, and Fiji is negotiating for the return of some items from Britain.

The solution to the problem above is: 1. K-K3, KxK; 2. K-K4 mate; or 1. KxK; 2. K-Q4* mate; or 1. RxN; 2. R-N5 d. ch. and mate, etc.

Regan's grand move, one that obviously upset his opponent, was his sixth. It was a variation that was used years ago but long since discarded — but so, unhappy for Lombardy, was the defense against it. Regan showed both imagination and daring in playing it. I suspect we shall be hearing more from this young man. His game with Lombardy continued for 45 more moves, upon which they decided to draw.

Hort, the winner, showed tremendous strength, and this after his poor performance in the Canadian Open in Montreal a couple of weeks earlier. Pal Benko actually tied with Hort as far as points went, but the U.S. Open was played under the Swiss System which does have defects. Because Benko lost two games relatively early, his subsequent opponents were not the highly ranked masters. Hort, on the other hand, battled the strongest players throughout.

Lombardy, Bisguier, Timman and Hans Bohm (who, like Timman, is from Holland) tied with 9½ points each. Bohm made an extremely good impression. Here is his win against the veteran Sammy Reshevsky. A splendid game.

WHITE: Bohm
BLACK: Reshevsky

RUY LOPEZ

1. P-K4 P-K4

2. N-KB3 N-QB3

3. B-N5 N1-K2

6. P-Q4 P-Q3

7. Q-N3 N-QR4

8. BxPch K-Q2 (a)

BLACK: Regan

6. PxP B-KN2!
7. PxPch K-B1
8. PxN equals KxQ
9. Q-N4 BxR
10. N-QB3 Q-KR1

(a) Fischer brought this variation back into vogue.

(b) Usual here is P-B3.

(c) If 17. RxQBP; K-Q2; 18. R-B3; B-N5; etc.

(d) If 39. PxP; 40. P-B5 and

41. K-B4 "finishes matters quickly."

(e) Black will run out of moves and White will get his King to KB5.

(f) If 45. P-B4, 46. K-N4,

47. K-B3, KxK; 48. K-N5, P-N5; 49. KxN and repeat the process until Black runs out of steam.

The solution to the problem above is: 1. K-K3, KxK; 2. K-K4 mate; or 1. KxK; 2. K-Q4* mate; or 1. RxN; 2. R-N5 d. ch. and mate, etc.

"The stick is so you can take it out of your mouth if you want to talk."

DENNIS THE MENACE

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: I brought two parakeets for a friend a year ago. Both eventually turned out to have blue across the bridge of their beaks which I am told indicates they are male. So my friend bought another parakeet whose bridge was just turning brown. Poor Henny hasn't made out too well so far. The male birds; one a rainbow and one a dark blue, won't have anything to do with her or her nesting box. The two males chatter across the room when separated. When out of their cage exercising they are always together kissing or following each other. Will either of the male parakeets ever outgrow the other and settle down with the yellow and green female? — L.S.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I could give my grandson a goldfish or something like that, of course, but I'd like to give him something more than that. How do you know when a child is old enough? — U.B.

DEAR U.B.: Certainly the very young child can't be expected to assume responsibility for a pet. The older usually needs at the very least direction and encouragement. The pet purchase must take into consideration the parents and their attitudes. They must be willing to accept it and agree that it can fit into their home environment. If they show little or no interest, the chances are poor that either the animal or the child will benefit from the experience as it should. Not even a goldfish should be subjected to neglect. To allow this is very poor training for the child. Of course, it is even harder on the goldfish...

Garden Profits Still to Come

Much time and energy has been invested in the production of fruits and vegetables over the past four months. Dividends on this investment have been received in the form of fresh produce, reduced food bills, and for some, experiences in taste.

The profit on this investment comes when the surplus can be retained in good condition for use during the less productive months.

Preservation of surpluses is achieved in several ways involving modern and old fashioned practices. These include freezing, canning, storing, and leaving certain plants in the soil to be harvested as needed through the months ahead.

The easiest vegetables to handle are those which can be left in the soil, such as parsnips, beets, winter cabbage, kale, Brussels sprouts, Jerusalem artichoke, winter radish, winter spinach, Swiss chard. Some of these have distinctly better flavor after being subjected to frost.

 The introduction of new vegetable varieties especially suited to freezing has solved storage problems for those who have grown these varieties, own a freezer, and have the necessary information relating to the different types of vegetables and their preparation for freezing.

This information may be found in libraries, or obtained from the home economics divisions of federal and provincial governments, and suppliers of light and power.

The difficult things to handle are those vegetables and fruits which are usually grown in large quantities (too large for storing in a freezer), unsuitable for freezing, or needing to be picked or lifted from the soil at a given state of maturity.

In this group are apples, pears, potatoes, carrots, turnips, squash, pumpkins, marrows, onions, to name those found in most gardens.

Root cellars, ventilated vegetal storage rooms and fruit cupboards, once considered essential features of every home, are no longer included in building plans, and few modern builders have any idea of their construction.

 The features of today's homes are cupboard doors, revolving panels, or sliding panels designed for storing a hundred or more cans of processed meats and vegetables, and cupboards with adjustable shelves to accommodate prepared foods in packages of all sizes and shapes.

Nowhere in the whole structure is there any provision for storing raw fruits and vegetables at temperatures and relative humidity suitable for preservation over extended periods.

The practice of storing food crops has been developed to a science. We know the exact temperature and moisture content of the air, and the gases and sprays which will inhibit maturing, so that crops can be stored for almost a year. But this information is useless to home gardeners living in insulated, heated homes, where dry air is essential to keeping the paint on the walls.

 All we can do is store our produce under the best conditions we can provide, and enjoy as much as possible before deterioration goes too far.

Even without ideal storage conditions, we can lengthen the storage life of both fruits and vegetables by handling them with the greatest of care.

It is difficult to account for the rough manner in which many gardeners handle their produce, shaking fruit from the trees, throwing potatoes and carrots around like rocks, and dumping from pallets to sacks or boxes like so much sand.

All rough handling results in bruises which are damaged cells, and damaged cells are the start of storage troubles. Careful handling is common sense, and a protection of our investment.

Before harvesting commences, a space must be reserved for storing.

 Pumpkins are left out until the first frost. They store well, or place outdoors in sun for a week, until all odor of the disinfectant is gone.

Each variety of apple and pear has its own picking date. Early varieties are harvested here in August and used immediately; they are not keepers. Keeping varieties must stay on the tree to reach a certain stage of maturity, so that harvesting continues until October.

For identification and picking dates, submit three fruits to any office of the B.C. Dept. of Agriculture.

Apples must be spread to sweat for four to five days before being put into storage boxes; storage temperature, 34° to 40° degrees F; relative humidity 75 per cent. Pears do not sweat, may be placed immediately on shelves in a single layer without touching, in Temp. of 34° to 40° degrees F, and R.H. of 50 per cent. Pears are never boxed for storage.

Potatoes can be stored with apples, following the old belief that the gas from the apples inhibits sprouts on the potatoes.

 Potatoes that have reached maturity have to be stored because they will split if left in the ground. Only sound roots will store, and they are best in dry sand to prevent loss of moisture. Mid-July showings are lifted and used as needed.

Onions store best in netted sacks or spread on shelves. Together with garlic, they require 45° degrees and R.H. of 50 per cent. The chemistry of both these bulbs changes when the small green shoot appears in the centre, usually in February.

Pumpkins are left out until the first frost. They store well, or place outdoors in warm dry conditions, 55° degrees, and a R.H. less than 50 per cent.

 A small basement room can sometimes be adapted to cool, moist storage conditions. It is necessary to insulate the walls and the ceiling, and provide adequate ventilation. Cold air is taken from just above grade level and carried through a six-inch stove pipe to within a few inches of the floor.

An escape vent for the warmer air and gasses given off by the different fruits and vegetables, is located at ceiling level. A six-inch stove pipe damper in the cold vent is adjusted to suit outdoor conditions.

dry storage, a small room or large cupboard is vented into the basement at top and bottom with vents large enough to give ample air circulation.

Many home gardeners forget that crops in storage are living things that respire, as long as the cells remain sound. Lack of fresh air, either cool and moist or warm and dry, results in rapid deterioration. Anything worth growing is worth careful handling and the best storage conditions we can provide.

 Potatoes are stored with apples, following the old belief that the gas from the apples inhibits sprouts on the potatoes.

Continue work on plans for new garden design. Plan towards more interest during winter with foliage and flowers; and a garden seat in winter sun for leisurely coffee on pleasant days.

First batch of potted bulbs for winter flowers indoors should be in now. Need eight to 10 weeks rooting in cold place before starting top growth.

Pull up summer bedding annuals by the roots for composting. If putting in spring bulbs, prepare the ground at once and get them in.

Wallflowers, polyanthus and other spring biennials go into flowering places now to become well established before cool weather. Don't let them suffer from lack of water. No fertilizer at this time.

Rhododendrons are in flower now. After flowers fade, remove just the old blossoms, but allow all leaves to remain to feed the bulbs for next year.

Continue work on plans for new garden design. Plan towards more interest during winter with foliage and flowers; and a garden seat in winter sun for leisurely coffee on pleasant days.

Lift onions and garlic before a rainstorm starts them into growth again.

Compost all plant material discarded. You need the soil.

Water the lilies which are time; and no peat moss for wallflowers or stocks.

Transplant lettuce and endive to lengthen season. Make a last sowing of Early Simson and Cos. Both stand cool weather, and if protected of cold frame glass is given later on frosty nights, you should have these fresh until Christmas.

Also sow a few parsley and chervil seeds for winter salads.

Tomatoes are ripening quickly now; pick off all new flowers. Use summer squash as they reach small sizes; allow keeping varieties to remain for maturing.

Lift onions and garlic before a rainstorm starts them into growth again.

Compost all plant material discarded. You need the soil.

Premiers Talk Economy

TORONTO (CP) — Discussion of the state of the economy will highlight the agenda of the provincial premiers' conference to be held here Sept. 12-13. Premier William Davis announced today.

The premier said in a statement that other items to be considered include interprovincial co-operation for economic development, federal activities in the direct employment program, appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and interprovincial machinery and liaison.

The statement said the agenda was prepared in consultation with the provinces during the last few months.

Sugar pricing no sweet chore

The Sugar Spiral: Onward Upward

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

The 10-cent chocolate bar is now 20 cents and candy wholesalers say it will go to 25 cents by Christmas.

Last year's $2.50 one-pound box of chocolates is now $3.50 and rising.

The smallest bottle of soft drinks two weeks ago was 20 cents and now is 25 cents, including the 5 cent deposit on the bottle.

In the past year a 14 ounce tin of pears has gone from 29 cents to 40 cents, a 22 ounce bottle of syrup has jumped to 63 cents from 40 cents and bubble gum has doubled to 10 cents a pack from a nickel.

They all have one major ingredient in common — sugar.

One year ago a 5-pound bag of sugar sold for 75 cents. Today it sells for $2.50, an increase of 335 per cent.

The price of sugar has risen rapidly since a five-year world pricing agreement expired Jan. 1 but the increase has been most rapid in the past 30 days from $36.60 to $44.25 per 100 pounds wholesale.

The escalation has boosted the price of all products using sugar, particularly candies, cookies and processed fruits.

W. S. Deacon, president of Berryland Canning Ltd., said the cost of sugar alone would add one cent a tin to canned peaches and pears in the past 30 days.

He said consumers could expect to pay 40 per cent more than last year for all canned fruits using a thick syrup, a revised estimate from the 35 per cent increase expected at the prevailing price of sugar in August.

Products expected to go up full 40 per cent are tins of peaches, strawberry jam, pears and cherries. Prunes will go

The tensions of the last days have been mounting and sometimes Knievel loses his temper, his wife said. (Stories, pictures pages 5, 11).

Mrs. Knievel says she has been upset about her husband's Sunday rocket-cycle jump across the Snake River Canyon, but the hundreds of letters and cables the family has received cheered her up. "It has to turn out right with so many people praying for it; I just can't feel bad anymore," Mrs. Knievel said in a telephone interview from her Butte, Mont., home.

Nimsick Frets Over Mine Lag

Mines Minister Leo Nimsick said Friday he is concerned about the absence of development of new mines in British Columbia and is asking the mining industry for possible solutions.

One method the government would consider, if the mining industry could show that it would help, "would be a change in the way the royalty provisions of the controversial Mineral Royalties Act (Bill 31) are applied to new mines," he said.

"If it was shown that, by such a move new mines would come into production, then we would consider it."

The minister said the method his department is studying as a means of spurring development of new mines is a change in the way Bill 31's escalating royalty is applied to new mines.

According to the formula in the legislation, if the net value of production passes a level 20 per cent higher than a basic price set by the government, the government then collects 30 per cent of any increase.

Nimsick said that due to highest development costs new mining ventures face, the government might consider changing the basic price when the royalty formula is applied to new mines.

"But there is nothing definite yet," he cautioned, adding that he is in the process of sending letters out to the mining industry, asking for suggestions.

The minister said he wasn't even certain that Bill 31, which he said will be proclaimed before the end of this month, is the cause of the drop in new mine production.

Massive Manhunt In Double Murder

A massive city-wide manhunt is underway today following the murder of two middle-aged women employees of a quiet Esquimalt corner store Friday.

Esquimalt Police Chief Art Burton said detectives are still checking leads from neighborhood residents. So far there are no suspects, he added.

Police, responding to a phone call around 2:30 p.m. Friday, discovered the bodies of Florence Bevan, 62, of 1324 Lyall and Jane Isabel Plume, 51, of 1153 Munro, on the floor of a small stockroom near the front counter of Ray's Food Market, 1325 Esquimalt.

Early this morning, plainclothes men were thrashing through high grass around the small store searching for the murderer weapon, believed to have been a knife.

Last to See Women

Soft drink salesman George Doucette may have been the last person to see the women alive before the killer struck.

"That's what bothers me," Doucette said. "It bothers me because it might not have happened if I had been there longer and it bothers me as I might have been killed too."

He said when he arrived at 1:20 p.m. to deliver soft drinks, Mrs. Plume, a mother of four, was alone in the store.

During the 35 minutes he was there, a few people came into the store - all women. As he was leaving, Mrs. Bevan entered. Friday was her day

A large yellow sign on the front door of the store read "Closed."

A bread delivery van pulled up in front of the market this morning, but the driver, seeing the sign and the detectives at work, pulled away.

The motive appeared to be robbery, about $80 was missing from the till and the women's purses had been opened Burton said.

The women's skulls had been fractured and each had been stabbed at least 12 times, "any of which could have inflicted death," according to police.

Youth Found Bodies

Burton said the women died sometime in the hour before their bodies were discovered by a youth living across the street who had gone to the store to cash in some pop bottles and buy cigarettes. The front door of the store wasajar and the youth saw the bodies. He ran to a neighbor who called police.

There was no sign of a struggle, Burton said. A halffull soft drink bottle rested on the counter. Bloody tracks left at the scene indicated the murderer was alone.

Police feel the killer must have entered just minutes after Doucette drove off.

Residents in the area heard

"Right, see you next week," Mrs. Bevan added.

Doucette said he "vaguely" remembers seeing someone "with a dark complexion" walk down the street as he left.

"I was too busy loading the truck to pay much attention and don't know whether he passed by or entered the store."

CITY WELFARE TAB UP BY $500,000

Ad. Malcolm Anderson said today welfare costs appear to be running far in excess of budget and the provincial government spending could cost Victoria at least $500,000 more this year.

He was commenting on a Vancouver report that welfare costs are expected to reach $384.5 million this year, about $120 million more than the $264.5 million estimated by the provincial government.

Barrett would neither confirm nor deny the report. He said spending would stay within the limits of revenue but did not specify what he would have to stay within limits of the estimates.

Anderson said there is considerable evidence the government is overspending in welfare and Victoria will be forced to pay a share of the costs under the cost-sharing formula.

Victoria had budgeted $5 million for its share of welfare costs but the overrun will increase the amount at least to $5.5 million, he said.

Vancouver's increased share will be about $3 million.

Anderson said it was disturbing that the government was letting welfare costs escalate in a period of low unemployment.

"I shudder to think what will happen to welfare costs if there is a slowdown and high unemployment in British Columbia."

Barrett must get a tighter rein on spending by his cabinet ministers or the provincial government's budget would be in difficulties, he added.

"These high welfare costs in a good year are nothing short of a scandal."

All Traffic Can Bear Under New Rent Law

By AL FORREST

British Columbia rental man Barrie Clark said Friday that starting Oct. 1 landlords will be able to raise their rents as high as they wish, if they can get the tenant to accept it.

The new rent increase limit is 8 per cent and the landlord wished to raise the rent 12 per cent; he would have to open his books to the rentalman and prove he needed the extra four per cent.

In the event of an appeal, the landlord has the right to collect an increase up to the provincial limit until a verdict is handed down by the rentalman office.

Officials of the rentalman office indicated that decisions could take some time because of the heavy load of paperwork involved in covering all B.C. from one office.

"It might take 30 days just to get an acknowledgement that your letter has been received," one official of the rentalman office said.

"We are very concerned because we do not have a large enough staff to handle this big job."

Car-Owner Grant... But Not for Victoria

The provincial government plans a $30-$40 car-owner grant next year—but not in Victoria.

Reason for the grant, according to a copyright story in the Vancouver Sun, is to alleviate ICBC premium differences in various parts of the province. Owners of commercial vehicles will get a flat 20 per cent discount in premiums.

Victorians will not benefit from the $35 million program because they have traditionally enjoyed lower insurance rates than other parts of the province, according to the story.

The act gives the cabinet the power to change the limit from time to time. Clark said he would announce a new figure Sept. 16 to take effect Oct. 1.

What do you tell a child about God? Just what is the best sex education? Should parents be strict? Lenient? When your child tries to take over, what do you do?

These questions and many others relating to child-rearing in this day and age are brought out in a consecutive 10-part series by eminent pediatrician Dr. Benjamin Spock, starting today on Page 41 of The Times Family Section.

MONEY SAVERS

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

They don't make the headlines.

They're not there when the medals are handed out.

But in this inflationary period when overburdened taxpayers condemn the spiralling costs of government, it is the staff of the any government department that is the yaff of the materials engineering section of the Defence Research Establishment. Established at CFB Esquimalt.

These "unsung 'backroom boys'" save the taxpayers millions of dollars through the research and day-to-day testing carried out in their laboratories.

They make the lives of servicemen safer. They also play a part in ensuring that ships and other armed forces equipment last longer, function better and make breakthroughs that are copied by navies of other countries.

All this with a staff of less than 20.

Even a reporter unversed in scientific jargon comes away from the unpretentious building inside the main gates convinced it is the "heart" that pumps physical health into all the limbs of Canada's armed forces, but particularly the ships of the Pacific command.

Department head Ralph Barer emphasises that, although, most of the work done in the DREP department is for the navy, the scientists and technical staff also solve problems that crop up in the airforce and army.

Helicopter blades, structural members, landing gear of planes and gun parts are part of the inventory studied for the other two services.

Recently fears of officials at CFB Comox when they discovered what appeared to be a lubricant leak from a CF101 jet were proven unfounded.

On examination by Dick Sewell's organic chemistry section, the "black gunk turned out to be a sealant," Barer reported.

Advances made in combating corrosion, later copied by other navies, and long-range studies of paint by the section headed by Jack Carson, have drastically cut the amount of time when ships are in drydock and inoperational.

"Ships used to dock every six months or so because of fouling or corrosion," Barer said, "Now they can go as long as 30 or 40 months."

Protective anodes, situated on the outside of a ship's bottom and inside her bilges have been found to counteract corrosion that once ruined propellers and stopped the need to replace plates, once vulnerable to corrosion in the bilges.

Clin Waggoner, was responsible for an on-the-spot testing system of materials that is now being carried on by ships at sea.

He initiated it by having simple equipment installed aboard the destroyer-escort HMCS Yukon. A technician travelled in Yukon for a month, teaching some of the ship's crew testing procedures.

The pilot project worked and now a more sophisticated testing program is in operation in the supply ship HMCS Provider, as well as her sister ships on the east coast, HMCS Preserver and HMCS Protector.

The afloat program means that on-the-spot testing reduces the odds against major problems developing.

An example of this is the destroyer-escort HMCS Terra Nova which, with other Esquimalt ships, was due to leave Hawaii after an exercise.

Samples flown from the ship to Esquimalt showed that a bearing was breaking down. A message was sent to the ship, reaching her hours before she was due to leave, warning her of the danger.

"If nothing had been done she would have had to make it back on one main shaft," Waggoner said. "This way we were able to avoid a lot of lost time at sea."

Carson's department and the Metallurgy and Non-Destructive Testing section headed by Frank Peters combined forces to grapple with one of the navy's most recent problems.

Four Esquimalt-based destroyer-escorts were equipped with expensive variable sonar devices — thought to cost in the neighborhood of $250,000 each.

Through some fault, at least three of the devices have been plagued with problems. HMCS Restigouche, as an instance, lost hers in 3,600 feet of water off the west coast of Vancouver Island in May.

It's been discovered that the head which connected the cable to the device was overly vulnerable to corrosion. This has been rectified and Barer says while it may not be the entire answer, it will certainly prolong use by hundreds of hours.

Also, it was found cable, imported from an English manufacturer, was faulty; having "kinks" in the electrical conductors. Now each piece of expensive cable is examined under X-ray.

synthetics, particularly plastics, complicates probing causes of fire under normal circumstances.

But, by making gaschromatophs with equipment that breaks down the components under varying heat conditions, the scientific probes have been able to pin down the causes of fire from tiny particles of remains sent to them.

Oil analysis, also used by certain segments of the civilian industry, is used to assess the degree of machinery failure.

By using an Atomic Absorbing Spectrometer, the particles of metal in a lubricant will give an accurate gauge of how far the metal has deteriorated.

It was testing by this machine that saved the Terra Nova from serious problems on her trip back from Hawaii.

Day by day, the scientists and their staff carry out these and many other functions, going unnoticed as they leave through the dockyard gate as each day ends.

Heroes?

They'd be the last to admit it.

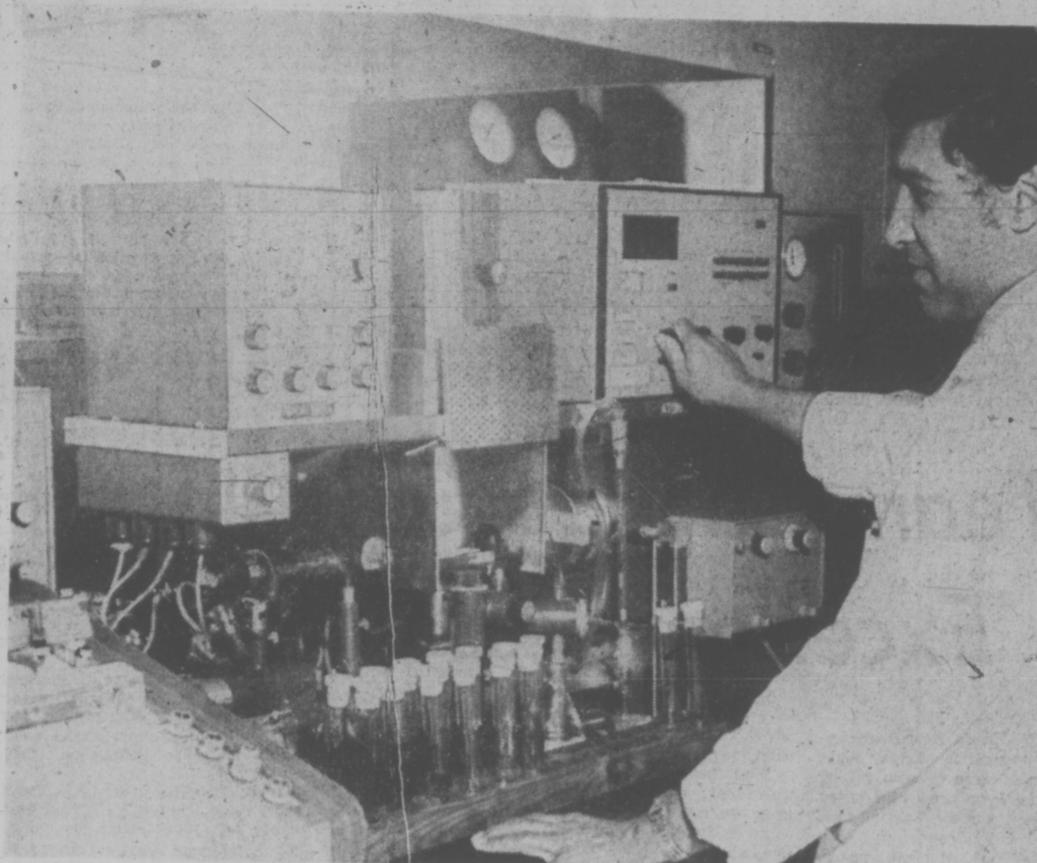

As Barer says:

"My people feel strongly that the support we get from people in the service, and the way some of them have fought for our ideas is the key to our success."

"We couldn't have done it without them."

Luckily for the overtaxed taxpayer, they keep on doing it.

... Skirting The Issue

It seemed to be barely skirting the law. And, it also looked like time to give someone a dressing down.

The classified advertisement read in part "waiter or waitress wanted . . . must wear skirt . . ."

So a Times reporter did; going the whole (male chauvinist) hog, clad in a nifty gold and black lame number that stopped traffic on Douglas.

Unfortunately, the position had been filled — as soon as it was advertised, according to Mrs. Gerry Taylor, wife of the owner of Caesar's Italian Village, 1813 Douglas.

A female had taken it. One with a fair amount of experience as a cashier, part of the work needed, according to Mrs. Taylor.

No men had applied. If, however, one had and "had been suitable," he would have "got the job, no doubt about it," Mrs. Taylor added.

Why, you might ask, apply for a second job? My dear, have you seen the price of pantyhose lately?

Ah well, that's the way the pizza crumbles . . . and the whole thing would have been a drag, anyhow.

Q. I have a paper clip in the shape of a horseshoe with the following engraved on it: M. Myers and Son, Good Luck, 1870, England. Could you please tell me about them or where I may obtain this information?

Also, is there anywhere one may obtain information on religious medallions?

A. The horseshoe clip is listed as an antique. The Registrar of Companies, Companies House, 55-71 City Road, London, E.C. 1, England,

Love of Jesus Showdown Set

A trial in B.C. Supreme Court opens in Victoria Tuesday to settle a decade of feuding between two factions within the Society of the Love of Jesus.

At issue is who controls the society, with assets estimated at $1.5 million.

The society's assets include the St. Mary's Priory property at Langford where one faction is operating an extended care hospital and a home for senior citizens.

The Priory building was the scene last year of a seven-month "sit-in" by three members of the other faction after an attempt was made to lock them from the building.

The two factions have been described as the "traditional" group and the "modern" group. The society is associated with the Benedictine order of the Roman Catholic Church.

The traditional group is led by Mother Cecilia Mary, 85, founder and head of the society for many years and now operating an animal shelter at Mill Bay.

With her are Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Forde, the trio who conducted the sit-in, and Sister Mary Julia Kelly, who assists Mother Cecilia at the animal shelter.

The modern faction is headed by Sister Leonette Horning, mother prioress, and includes Sisters Mary Grace Neider, Mary Elizabeth Dubnowsky and Mary Patricia Jones.

The traditional group is suing the society to gain control of it and its property.

Camosun Courses Crammed

Most courses offered at Camosun College's Lansdowne campus were packed when registration closed at the college Friday.

Admissions officer Mary Ellen King said 1,700 students have enrolled for Lansdowne courses, with a substantial increase in the number of full-time students over last year.

The Victoria Public Library has several books on religious medallions, but no one book will give all the information on all medallions. The books are specialized and deal with medallions made during specific periods of religious history. Depending on which period you're interested in, you should be able to get the information at the library.

claiming its members are the only members in good standing.

The case is expected to take at least two weeks and will be heard by Mr. Justice H. C. McKay at the Law Courts.

Hugh McMillan is counsel for the traditional faction and Cecil Branson is counsel for the society.

Man Guarded After Murder

A man under 24-hour a day police guard in hospital has been arrested in connection with the murder Thursday of Mrs. Marlene Hutchison.

Roland Bird, 35, also known as Roland Tobacco, will appear in court at a date still to be set, police said today.

Saanich police found Mrs. Hutchison, 34, dead in a home at 1238 Oakmount.

She had recently begun working at a furniture store.

Bird was also found with a shotgun wound in his chest.

What do you think? I asked.

"I think it's ready," Win said. She plucked the Tirsiling of a late-planted and hard-won crop, and with a minor flourish, set it in the colander.

We'll share it tonight, not chopped into a salad but quartered on a bed of lettuce leaves with the merest touch of Italian dressing added.

But we resisted the impulse.

A vine-ripened tomato has a flavor that no vegetable or fruit finished off indoors can duplicate. It's like eating its ripening behind glass on a window sill.

But we resisted the impulse.

The first Salt Spring Sunrise, when we gave it a final inspection, lived up to its expectations. It was well-shaped and large, though not flamboyantly so. Its color was just right — a rich, uniform red.
